A RIDE TO KHIVA

BY CAPTAIN FRED BURNABY,
 Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 73: "Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fame as a medicine man had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE "GLOBE" ON IRISH LEGISLATION IN INDIA.

Lord Ripon seems to have created for himself a perfect hornet's nest of troubles. Not content with setting at naught the feelings and susceptibilities of the Anglo-Indian and Eurasian communities, he must needs provoke the hostility of the landowners, perhaps the most important and powerful class in India, by introducing land legislation on the Irish model. Towards the close of last session a number of these threatened proprietors forwarded a petition to the House of Commons, praying to be left alone. A similar memorial now comes to hand from the zemindars and other landowners of the great and wealthy province of Behar. It bears the signatures of the Maharajahs of Darbhanga, Deo, Hutwa, and Gidhour, besides those of 1,854 smaller magnates. They show very conclusively that the proposed innovations will altogether upset the existing system of land tenure, and produce a state of things in which the zemindar will be reduced to the condition of a cypher, without any real proprietary rights in his own property. On the other hand, the introducer of the Bill into the Legislative Council admitted that it might possibly produce disastrous results to the ryots, in whose interest it is supposed to have been conceived. A greater bungle was never perpetrated, not even in the Ilbert Bill, and the wonder is that a Viceroy who can thus recklessly play with fire, should be allowed to retain the position which enables him to endanger the safety of the empire.

THE "GLOUCESTERSHIRE ECHO" ON THE LAND QUESTION IN BENGAL.

Mr. Gladstone and his Government have tried their 'prentice hands at remodelling the Land Laws of Ireland, with the result that landlords are deprived of their income, and tenants assessed to a rent which is as often as not inadequate and unfair, so that neither landlord nor tenant is satisfied. This is a fact that cannot be too strongly impressed upon all who have any interest in land, and as the same men intimate their intention of meddling with the Land Laws of England and Scotland, in addition to the incomplete and hurriedly adopted Agricultural Holdings Act, it is well that steps have been taken by our fellow citizens to India to let the English voter know what is being attempted there. The Ilbert Bill, which has so disastrously agitated our Eastern Empire during the whole of the present year, and which has been bolstered by "cooked telegrams" from Governmental sources, is not nearly so well appreciated at home as it should; by nearly every mail we receive appeals from India with regard to the evil effect which the ill-timed and crude proposal has had both upon natives and Europeans, and now we are receiving similar literature with regard to the Bengal Rent Bill. We received by the last mail the copy of a lengthy petition from the zemindars and other landholders in Behar to the English House of Commons and the subject could scarcely be more powerfully dealt with. The effect of the Bill is summed up in a phrase which aptly describes what has been the effect of similar legislation in Ireland—it "will revolutionise the province of Behar," and this without the excuse that was available in Ireland, that a discontented peasantry declined to pay their rents. The present position of the ryots, or tenants, of Behar may be briefly summed up in the words of the petition itself, thus:—When the British Government assumed the direct administration of Bengal and Behar in 1772, they at any rate found the zemindars in possession of large estates and exercising the ordinary rights of proprietors. Some of the Rajahs of Behar date their origin from times anterior to the conquest of Bengal by the Mahomedans while others have received proprietary grants and titles of honour from the Emperor Akbar, who was a contemporary of Queen Elizabeth. During the long period of Mahomedan domination, their rights as proprietors were never questioned, and the fact, that in Behar the land is mainly held by Hindoo proprietors, shows how little the Mahomedans interfered with the vested rights of the people. Nor did the British Government on succeeding to the administration of the country, make any change in the system or policy of their Mahomedan predecessors. What was actually done when the East India Company conquered the province was very similar to the great step taken by the late Ozar—the ryots were released from their position of serfdom and made free men, and certain undertenants were assured of retaining their holdings at fixed rents, which the land owners were forbidden to increase; the remainder of their lands the zemindars were empowered to let under certain conditions at any rent they could get, a distinct provision to prevent extortion being imposed in cases where rent was payable in kind. A great deal has been done since this settlement of 1793 to improve the holdings, and but two years ago Sir Ashley Eden, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, said that nothing had given him greater pleasure than to notice the "extraordinary improvement in the condition of the people. It is made manifest in a hundred ways daily, even to the most casual observer. I hear the same story from all classes, official and non-official, and it is a matter for general congratulation." With this official commendation ringing in their ears, it is not to be wondered at that the landowners of the province should be startled by the announcement that Lord Ripon was going to try his 'prentice hand upon improving their legal securities in a manner which strangely recalls the doings of his colleagues in the Sister Isle. He proposes to revive tenant rights which have been "obscured, effaced, and destroyed during centuries of Mahomedan rule, rights which admittedly find no place in the legislative enactments of 1793." It provides that a person who has held land for a period of twelve consecutive years, shall—"notwithstanding any contract to the contrary"—become a settled ryot, a position which gives him the right to sell the zemindar's land—due provision being made against the zemindar buying back his own land, he being allowed simply to buy out a defaulting tenant—or of subletting it without the owner's consent. That the Bill would defeat all existing contracts need hardly be pointed out, but a very significant fact must not be overlooked—the Bill expressly provides that these provisions shall not affect land held under the Government, a curious provision on the part of a Radical and reforming Government, very conclusively proving that they do not think that "charity begins at home." It is impossible to go through the case as presented by the zemindars, without feeling that a great and uncalled for wrong is being done to them by this interference with a settlement and with rights which have been in operation for ninety years without complaint. None but a Radical Government would so violate extensive private rights, and while the present Government remains in office we have no security that other private rights will be respected. What wonder then that the petitioners conclude their case in words which will meet with a sad response from Ireland, Natal, and other parts of the globe but which should be re-echoed with such force in this country that they should have the hoped-for effect, that of pulling-up the Government in its headlong career towards destruction. The zemindars "have always been conspicuously loyal to the British Crown during the times of difficulty at the beginning of the century; and during the most troublous days of 1857, the zemindars of Bengal and Behar placed themselves, their influence, and their wealth ungrudgingly at the disposal of the Government. But if this wealth and this influence is destroyed, to what class of the community will the Government in future look for support? If the zemindars, whose welfare has always been bound up with the British Government, are sacrificed to visionary theories, what class of the community will be able in future to repose with confidence, on—what had up to the present time been inviolable—the honour and good faith of the British Government?"

[EXETER AND PLYMOUTH GAZETTE.]

THE Ilbert Bill is not the only cause of discord in connection with Lord Ripon's Indian policy. The landowners of India, large and small, are figuratively up in arms against the proposal to introduce land legislation on the Irish model, and are petitioning Parliament, as well as appealing to the British public. They point out that the tendency of the Rent Bill will be to take away from the present proprietors of land all but the shadow of their rights. It is declared that there was no demand on the part of the ryots, or from any other quarter, for this kind of legislation, which seems to have been wantonly applied by Lord Ripon. It is not even certain, as the authors of the scheme admit, that the ryots will not be disastrously affected by the measure intended for their especial benefit. The introducer of the Bill into the Legislative Council said that, in the event of the Bill turning out badly for the ryots, as predicted by the opponents of the measure, "the Government would know what steps to take" to repair the damage. So this adaptation to India of the Radical land legislation, which has been tried with doubtful success in Ireland, is a pure experiment. It must be added that is a very dangerous one. It would seem as if Lord Ripon were determined to treat Indian institutions as he might strange toys, turning them upside down just to see what will happen. Even if it had been proved that confiscatory land legislation was good for Ireland, that would not have rendered it suitable for India. As it is, the confiscation policy in Ireland has not been a brilliant success, from any point of view that can be called honest. India has been turned into a playground for Lord Ripon. That is bad enough; but confiscation is almost as dangerous a plaything as fire.

[MONMOUTHSHIRE BEACON.]

ENCOURAGED by what the Home Government have done in Ireland, the Legislative Council of the Governor General and Viceroy of India have now under consideration a Bill which, it is declared, if permitted to pass into law, will not only deprive the zemindars, or landowners, of Behar, of their property, but will revolutionise the whole province. The avowed object of the Bill, specifically stated, is to confer a transferable and hereditary right upon the ryots; and to make this newly-created tenant right still more valuable, the zemindars are to be prohibited from entering into any contract or agreement with their tenants, as to the terms upon which the land is to be held or the rate of rent which the tenants are to pay. Can anything more arbitrary than this be conceived? It is in reality a proposal for the entire subversion of all proprietary rights in the soil—a principle which, if once admitted, will assuredly be productive of dire results throughout the whole British Empire, and eventually throughout the world. Considerations like these, possibly, may weigh nothing with the reformers. To them it is sufficient that they have formed a determination to strike at all existing institutions, and whether the course recommended is productive of good or evil, they care little, so long as their own pet schemes are put into operation. But there are interests to be considered beyond those of both the landowner and the cultivator, and which would assuredly be affected by the application of any such principle as that indicated. No kind of property could be deemed to be safe if once the principle referred to were recognised as legitimate. Therefore, regarding it as the thin end of the wedge which, at some day terminate in an entire annihilation of all actual understanding between man and man, it is to be fervently hoped that the new policy which was initiated in Ireland and is about to be attempted in Behar, will be resisted to the very utmost.

THE LIBERAL PARTY AND THE ILBERT BILL.

[FROM THE "EDINBURGH COURANT."]

THE Liberal party is drifting into a false and dangerous position with regard to the Ilbert Bill. There is no political necessity for defending the miserable offspring of Lord Ripon's ambition. The inhabitants of India, in their deep and general hostility to it, are not influenced by prepossessions in favour of this or that statesman. The Bill is disliked on its own merits, and would have been neither more nor less unpopular had it been introduced by Lord Lytton or any of his Conservative predecessors. Had the Liberal party in Great Britain been under the guidance of prudent and patriotic statesmen, the measure would have been long ago abandoned. For some unaccountable reason, however, the Viceroy's project is being obstinately defended on strictly party grounds. The Conservatives are accused of hampering liberty, advocating an unjust and reactionary policy, and a host of other things as false as they are hackneyed. There are various hypothetical reasons why the Liberals should take this course. The appointment of Lord Ripon to the viceroyship was never popular in Great Britain, because nobody could see that he had any special qualifications for the post. To some people this is a paramount reason why his policy should receive extra support. A strong Viceroy, they argue, is independent of friendly help, but a weak Viceroy needs all the backing which loud assertion and excessive laudation can supply. In the eyes of Radicals the Bill has also in itself something attractive, as being in accordance with those rules of abstract right and perfect equality which they propagate. If the Liberal party is really actuated by principles such as these, it is merely delivering itself up to its enemies. The Ilbert Bill on such grounds may gain the support of a few bitter partisans and ill-informed theorists, but men of experience and common sense will judge it by a different standard. Is it a politic measure? Will it conduce to the dispensation of even justice? What effect will it have upon the relations in which natives stand to Europeans? These are the questions which rise in the minds of those whom the change will affect. The Liberal leaders may drag thick-and-thin supporters with them, but moderate men who are not blinded by party feeling will apply some such tests as we have indicated. The result is being daily witnessed. The opponents of the Bill are gaining a vast number of recruits from those who usually are entirely in favour of the Government. If Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright persevere in the course they have adopted, they will end by alienating some of their best friends. On the other hand, if they condemn the measure, they will perhaps force Lord Ripon to resign—an event which they seem desirous of avoiding.

Wise statesmen would at any rate pause before they proceeded further with their championship of the Bill. The Anglo-Indian Society in London, formed to protest against it, has many members who hold Liberal opinions. The president of a similar institution in Calcutta is also a sound Liberal. Mr. Atkins, who has addressed the railway servants on the Bill, and who has been delegated to do so by the working men of India, avows himself a member of the same party. These are signs which no supporter of Lord Ripon can afford to ignore. The strongest agitation in opposition to his project is framed on strictly neutral lines, and is carried on by men of all kinds of opinion. The feeling in India is almost unanimously hostile. The European residents dread the new law, and the natives concern themselves very little about it. They are not educated to take the same interest in political questions which is felt in Great Britain, and as only an insignificant minority can read, views are disseminated solely by conversation—the most capable medium for distorting facts yet discovered. The Bill was not framed to meet the growing demand of an instructed population. It was created in the inventive mind of a politician. Nor does it remove injustice. The mass of the natives could not, were it passed without the alteration of a single word, hope to obtain the faintest shadow of benefit from its operation. It confers a privilege, and it is obvious that an enactment of that nature is open to objections which could not be applied to the proposed redress of a grievance. The native judges will gain nothing by the proposed extension of their jurisdiction, except a slight increase of dignity. In these circumstances very great importance should be attached to the deep aversion of those most deeply interested. The European inhabitants of India have a perfect right to raise their voices against a proposal so vitally important to them. They will be the sufferers from Lord Ripon's whim, and it is at the expense of the security of their property and lives that the Viceroy seeks to make a reputation. It therefore becomes them to give forth no uncertain sound, and to make their emphatic protest against injustice.

They have done this with a unanimity which leaves nothing to be desired. High and low, rich and poor, professional men and workmen, officials and non-officials, have signified their disapprobation in a manner most staggering to the friends of Lord Ripon. There is no blinking the fact that the Ilbert Bill is condemned right and left, and as unsparingly by experienced Anglo-Indian politicians as by the ordinary population. The mission of Mr. Atkins shows how acutely the working men feel the dangers of the position. Situated, as many of them are, far from the centre of population, they reasonably dread being subjected to the perils of corrupt courts presided over by idolaters, before whom it is possible to get witnesses to prove anything for sixpence or a shilling. For many reasons it is somewhat difficult to make the inhabitants of Great Britain feel the full gravity of the situation. Their interest in India is naturally of a secondary description, and they are so swayed by considerations of party that it is difficult for them to take an impartial view. Mr. Atkins, it has been suggested, should go round lecturing to all the Liberal associations against the Bill, and in this way he might get up a feeling against it. His efforts were hardly of a nature to encourage him, as his audience showed itself not only unconvinced, but hostile to his views. With all due respect to the railway servants, however, it may be said that their friends in India are much more capable of arriving at a sound conclusion with regard to the Ilbert Bill than they are. They have transacted their own business in a very creditable manner, but it may be questioned whether many of them have ever carefully considered the effect of the enactment which they condemn. Had they read of the reception which the Bill met in India, the mistrust it had excited among working men, and the discouragement it had cast over trade and capital, they would not have come to such a wrong conclusion. The Bill is really of immense importance to them. The Indian interests are their interests, and the Indian Empire is an open field for their energy. Even men who do not emigrate should remember the duty of seeing that the colonies are made as free, as secure, and as attractive as possible. The conflict of two races in India, embittered as it has been by the introduction of this imprudent measure, means the destruction of prosperity. A great responsibility is incurred by those who, despite the warning of friends as well as the opposition of foes, are taking a step so ominous of danger, difficulty, and disturbance.

MORE OPINIONS OF THE ENGLISH PRESS.

[EXETER AND PLYMOUTH GAZETTE.]

INDIAN opinion is still greatly exercised by the controversy about the Ilbert Bill. The Anglo-Indian Defence Association in India has passed several violent resolutions, impugning the right of the Government to enact their measure, and threatening actual resistance to the law if it should be carried. There is some excuse for the English residents in India if they lose their self-control. They feel that they have the Government opposed to them, at any rate in desire, and the native newspapers are making the most of the Anti-European weapon which Lord Ripon has placed in their hands. There is some ground, too, for the notion that the Government may be best restrained from committing themselves absolutely to the fatal folly which they favour by a display of determination on the part of Europeans to resist oppression at all hazards. To this lamentable pass has India been reduced by fantastic Radical rule. At home the agitation against the mischievous Bill progresses. The first meeting of the Executive Committee of the Anglo-Indian Association which has been held since the publication of the reports of the district officials, took place last week, when the following judicious and temperate resolution was passed:—"That a memorial be addressed to the Secretary of State, directing his attention to the great balance of Indian opinion, both official and non-official, recorded against the Ilbert Bill, and requesting that further proceedings be postponed until the members of both Houses of Parliament, and the public generally, have had the fullest opportunity of deliberately weighing and carefully considering the reports submitted to the Government of India." Considering that the Government asked for the official opinions, which have turned out to be largely opposed to the Bill, the request contained in the above resolution is not unreasonable. Whether the Government will listen to reason as long as they can avoid doing so, is another matter.

[MANCHESTER COURIER.]

THERE are grave differences of opinion among some members of the Cabinet, I am told, on the Ilbert Bill. All agree that the measure must pass in some shape—indeed, Lord Ripon has made that a sine qua non of his retaining office; but while some—including, it is said, Lord Kimberley himself—would confine its provisions to native members of the covenanted Civil Service, others would only modify it so far as to give Europeans imprisoned by native magistrates the right of appeal to higher authority. The objection to this latter proposal is that it would in most cases involve the accused in very heavy expenses.

[WESTERN MAIL.]

THE London Executive Committee of the Anglo-Indian Association have passed a resolution to send another memorial to the Secretary of State for India, calling his attention to the balance of opinion against the Ilbert Bill, and asking that that measure may be postponed till Parliament and the English people have had an opportunity of maturely considering the mass of official reports published in India. If the Bill is to be shelved until the people in England have read a Blue Book of 3,000 pages on a question they do not understand, it does not stand much chance of ever becoming law. Lord Kimberley and Lord Ripon who are now pressing on the Bill in defiance of Anglo-Indian protests, will welcome the suggestion that they should invite Parliament to pronounce an opinion on the Bill. They are sure of getting a favourable vote in the House of Commons, and they do not care what the House of Lords may say. It would be another matter if they had to pass through the Imperial Parliament a Bill which threatens to deprive Englishmen in India of a cherished constitutional right. In that case the Bill would certainly be thrown out by the House of Lords. But in the present state of things a Secretary of State belonging to a Ministry which has a majority in the House of Commons may rush a Bill through the nominee Council of the Viceroy of India, confiscating all the rights possessed by Englishmen in that country, and make it law at once without the formal consent of both Houses of Parliament. It is not right that such a dictatorial power should belong to any Minister, and Anglo-Indians ought, in our opinion, to ask that the constitution of the Indian Government may be so changed as to place their rights under the joint protection of the Houses of Lords and Commons.

[BATH JOURNAL.]

WE stated in our last issue most of the objections to the Bill that are urged by the Anglo-Indian community, and we showed the absence of any real necessity for its immediate introduction. It is not brought forward to supply a felt want, nor to meet an emergency, nor to conciliate a people who will be gratified by its passing. . . . It would be a valuable aid in the formation of local opinion upon the matter if the suggestion contained in Mr. Lethbridge's letter were acted upon. The outcome of the Bill may even be of more vital interest than party supremacy to the country at large; but whether or not Mr. Atkins be invited to address a Bath audience, the course recommended by the Anglo-Indian Association of London is certainly a prudent one. At a meeting of this society on Wednesday, Sir A. Arbuthnot presiding, the following resolution was unanimously agreed to:—"That a memorial be addressed to the Secretary of State directing his attention to the great balance of Indian opinion, both official and non-official, recorded against the Ilbert Bill, and requesting that further proceedings be postponed until the members of both Houses of Parliament and the public generally have had the fullest opportunity of deliberately weighing and carefully considering the reports submitted to the Government of India."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—In his letter to you on the subject of the proposed alteration of the Indian Criminal Procedure Code, Mr. Hunter professes to set forth and to meet the argument of the High Court Judges on the Bill. His exposition of that argument appears to me to be in many respects inaccurate and misleading. The judges do not, as Mr. Hunter alleges, "declare the covenanted native civilians to be a small and dwindling class." What they say is that "the covenanted native civilians who have passed into the service by competitive examination constitute, it is apparent, a small and dwindling class"—a statement justified by the fact that there are only six such officers in the whole of Bengal, of whom only one has been appointed since 1875, and none at all since 1879. Prospective legislation could not, the judges urged, be demanded on the ground of administrative necessity on behalf of such a class as this.

With regard to the other class, civilians nominated under 33 Vic., cap. 3, the judges show that of the six officers so nominated in Bengal, three were appointed in 1880, one in 1882, one in 1883; of these six, four have not yet passed the examination from which the period of eligibility for promotion begins to run, while the other two will not become eligible as officiating magistrates before 1888, nor as officiating judges before 1890. The system of nomination is accordingly described by the judges as scarcely "having passed beyond the stage of experiment," and they advise that a legislative change, which the entire European community regards with apprehension and dislike, should not be undertaken till increased numbers and longer experience make it possible to form a better opinion than we can now as to the administrative difficulties which may have to be met, and the capacity and character of the officials on whom enlarged jurisdiction is to be conferred. Legislation, they say, would then "proceed on a basis of practical experience, not on mere conjecture as to the conduct and character of officers about whom scarcely anything is known."

Mr. Hunter's argument is based on the contention that these two classes of civilians are, and must be regarded as identical. But the whole weight of official authority is against him. The judges' view is supported by the authoritative opinion of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, who corroborates his own view by the testimony of the Commissioner of the Presidency Division, to the effect that the "statutory civilians" come from the same classes as those from which the uncovenanted service is recruited, as influenced by the same class feelings and prejudices, and differ from the ordinary deputy magistrates, as far as there is any difference, only in being less hardworking and less experienced. "There is no magic," observes the Lieutenant Governor, "in the words 'covenanted service' which should be able to transform young men, taken from the same ranks as the general run of the subordinate civil service, into superior beings fitted for posts of high responsibility." Not only, however, is it still matter of conjecture how far the statutory nominees will prove themselves efficient and trustworthy officers, but the very system of their nomination must be regarded as still open to consideration. The Judges of the High Court point out that the present system is that "which was abandoned by the Government twenty-five years ago in favour of a competitive examination, and which can scarcely be expected to work more satisfactorily in India than it did in England." The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal observes that the system is objectionable as involving, "as against Europeans and Eurasians in India, one of the worst of anomalies, based purely on birth and race distinction," and adds that it "has not yet justified, and probably never will justify, the conclusion that men so selected and admitted will be competent for any other than subordinate positions." Even Sir Evelyn Baring, in the article recently published in the Nineteenth Century, admits that the rules under which the nominees are appointed are open to criticism, and that he personally wishes to see them altered. The class, therefore, in whose interest the present legislation is demanded on the ground of "administrative necessity" consists of six persons, four of whom have not yet passed the preliminary examination by which they will become eligible for promotion, while the other two will not be eligible for several years to come, all six having been nominated under a system which the highest authorities consider to need amendment. Can any practical statesman hesitate, in such a state of things, in adopting the view so forcibly expressed by the Governor of Bombay—that India is not a country in which to try schemes of prospective legislation, that each epoch can provide best for its own requirements, and that the wise and proper function of the Government is to provide, not for a hypothetical future, but for practical requirements proved by experience to exist, and put forward from time to time by those who have a right to speak on behalf of the people of India?

Mr. Hunter's main contention is that the Government is pledged by the Queen's Proclamation in 1858, announcing it to be Her Majesty's will that "all our subjects be, so far as may be, freely and impartially admitted to offices in our service, the duties of which they may be qualified by their education, ability, and integrity duly to discharge." From the obligation imposed by this proclamation the Bengal judges, he says, "try to open a door of escape by urging that the subject has been already decided by the Indian Legislature," and that in doing so "they rely on the Codes of 1861 and 1872, by which the restriction on the criminal jurisdiction of natives over Europeans was deliberately enacted." No such argument, so far as I can discover, is to be found in the judges' letter. The judges, it is true, express their opinion that, "on a review of the course of legislation since 1793, it is impossible to doubt that the intention and practice of the Government have been to surround the investigation and trial of offences charged against European British subjects in the Mofussil with special precautions, and, among those precautions, to restrict the jurisdiction in such cases to European officials;" and they proceed to show why, in their judgment, the time for abandoning this policy has not arrived. But they nowhere refer to any pledge supposed to have been given in the Queen's Proclamation, and no doubt for this excellent reason—that at the stage of the controversy at which the judges wrote, no such a view had ever been seriously put forward by any competent authority. No such contention was ever urged in the discussion in 1872 which resulted in the present law. No such interpretation has ever before been placed on the Queen's Proclamation, except in the rhetorical extravagances of Bengalee students, with whom "the expulsion of the stranger" and an "India for the Indians, from the Himalayas to Cape Comorin," are congenial topics for declamation. If any section of natives now put such an interpretation upon it, it is because they have been sedulously tutored for months past in the arts of political agitation and the fallacies and sophistries by which agitation may be kept alive. The contention which Mr. Hunter urges, that the Government must now either pass the Ilbert Bill or "recede from a long series of pledges granted by successive Secretaries of State, by Parliament, and by Her Majesty the Queen to the people of India," is one which a year ago would have astonished "the people of India" scarcely less than it does now Mr. Hunter's own countrymen. These pledges, he says, were given "with a view to securing the loyalty of the Indian races. They have done much to secure the loyalty of India, and the Government has now to decide whether, having gained its purpose, it will honestly fulfil the guarantees by which its purpose was gained." Government, I take the liberty of informing Mr. Hunter and those whom his authority is likely to mislead, has to decide nothing of the sort. The question is not whether the natives of India shall be excluded from any post of honour or emolument, but whether certain rights of Englishmen—enjoyed by them from the outset of British rule—which offer no hindrance to the impartial administration of justice, which occasion no injury to any other class, and to which the class concerned attaches a great though, as all the authorities agree, not exaggerated importance, shall be sacrificed, not to the cause of justice, not for the removal of any ascertained grievance, but to the recklessness and vanity of one or two young officials, and to the incredible weakness and short-sightedness of the Government, which has mistaken the hubbub of a mere handful of noisy individuals for the serious expression of a national wish. It never assuredly occurred to those who framed the Queen's Proclamation, or to those to whom it was addressed, that it involved the destruction of a personal privilege, which the few thousands of Englishmen, scattered up and down among the many millions of India, had immemorially enjoyed, which no one till a year ago ever seriously thought of impugning, and which a long array of experienced and impartial authorities declares to be, in the circumstances of the case, just, reasonable, and expedient. Nor, if the Government has now the good sense and magnanimity to recede from a proposal which has already done so much to embitter race animosities, will any reasonable native believe for a moment that the policy of the Queen's Proclamation has been abandoned, or that the pledges then given will not be faithfully observed. What the natives of India, and especially its most noisy and restless classes, will learn if this ill-judged measure be carried out is that no grievance can be too unreal, no pretext too sophistical, no fallacy too gross for the understanding of the English public; that the consensus of experienced officials, men of known ability, judgment, and benevolence, may be over-ridden by tumult, rhetoric, and agitation, and that the surest way to carry through any desired change is to get it taken up in England as a party cry.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

AN INDIAN OFFICIAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—As a representative of the working classes that are employed upon the railways and in the factories and mills of our Indian Empire, I beg permission to say a few words regarding the Ilbert Bill. The supporters of the Bill, in urging that it should become law, have assumed that the natives of India generally take an interest in the subject, whereas there is really not a fraction of them know anything at all about it. What the lower class of natives in the Mofussil do believe is that the British Raj is coming to an end. This idea has been brought about by the circulation among them of small pieces of black crape attached to slips of paper, on which are printed seditious sentences. Those people who caused these pieces of crape to be circulated broadcast doubtless intended they should serve the same purpose as the chuppatties did that were distributed before and during the Mutiny of 1857. It is not only the Europeans and Anglo-Indians that will be injured by the introduction of the Bill, but the poor, helpless ryots, native artisans, and industrial classes will suffer also. Of this the few natives who wish to be thought representatives of the masses are well aware, and they therefore follow the example set by high authority, and endeavour to keep their humble fellow-countrymen in ignorance of important truths, or represent them in such a garbled manner that they effect more harm than a direct lie would produce.

Those native gentlemen who come to England are representatives of the native zemindars and landowners, who may be perhaps termed the extreme Conservatives of India. They possess great powers now and desire more. It is this class that are the principal supporters of the Bill and who promote the agitation. I am sure that if the opinion of every native in India could be obtained an overwhelming majority would call out for its withdrawal. The natives who belong to the agricultural and industrial classes dread any extension of power to the native magistracy, and would like their number decreased instead of increased. The reason for this dislike is owing to the difficulty they experience in obtaining justice from their own countrymen. It is quite common for a native who has a case in a court which is presided over by a native, to ask his pleader to get it transferred to one in which justice is administered by a European. If humble natives, who know their countrymen, prefer a European to a native judge, is it at all surprising that Anglo-Indians should object to being placed under the jurisdiction of natives? The Tribune, a native paper published at Lahore, writing on native officials, says:—

"Native officials will be detected actually dealing in the places with which they are officially connected, and taking advantage of their official positions. Gratitude, that best of virtues in men, insensibly woos their minds to the administration of their pleasures, ease, and wealth, and very often these indirect objects of corruption are forced by their corrupt minds to do acts of favour for their friends which they would not have done otherwise. If these obligers happen to be in a position, they are sure to recoup themselves at the expense of those below them, and so on."

Another native paper, published at Bankipore, in the province of Bengal, condemns the arrogance of those natives who seek these extended powers, and says, "There is danger in entrusting these men with even the smallest authority."

I hope the publication of the above extracts will not cause anyone to think that I wish to make out all native officials are corrupt. I merely give them to show what opinion native editors have of their own countrymen. There are native officials who, I believe, try to perform their duties honestly; but in India the caste prejudices are so strong and race feeling runs so high, especially between Hindoos and Mahomedans, that justice is difficult to obtain if the magistrate is of the same creed and caste as either defendant or prosecutor. The condition of things in India has not escaped the keen observation of Sir Madhava Rao, K.C.S.I., who drew attention to it when addressing a body of native students at Madras last August. He said, "Make the best laws, frame the most elaborate rules, issue the most stringent circular orders, they would all be of little use unless ignorance and corruption are eliminated and intelligence and probity are substituted." Not least among the dangers that are attendant on court cases in India is false evidence, which is procurable in any Mofussil station for a trifling sum. Indeed, there are men who depend upon perjury for a livelihood. A judgment on an appeal delivered by the present Chief Justice of the High Court of the North West Provinces and Mr. Justice Tyrrell contains the following remarks:—"We are painfully familiar with the two ingenious resources of the bazaar witnesses, the ready ubiquity of those persons, minds, and manners is so remarkable, yet scarcely more so than the easiness of terms on which their singular gift may be procured." With such a condition of things existing in India, the protest of Europeans and Anglo-Indians against being placed under the jurisdiction of a body of men who are not only wanting in that penetration necessary to distinguish truth from falsehood, but whose judgment might be influenced by their sympathies deserves very much more consideration than it has received.

I cannot tell you how keenly the working classes in India feel this want of consideration for their interests by the Government. They have—or at least 90 per cent. of them have—made India their home, and scattered as they are, all over the Mofussil, they recognise the dangerous position they will occupy if the Ilbert Bill becomes law. An English workman may reside in a station very many miles from any legal adviser, and it will be quite possible for any revengeful native to bring a false charge against him or his wife, and by means of false witnesses have them convicted and put into gaol before anything can be done to prevent it.

Conspiracies against railway officials are, at the present time, by no means infrequent. Station-masters who have refused to favour wealthy native merchants, or declined to take bribes from them, have been falsely accused of delaying the dispatch and delivery of goods, of assaulting traders, or some other offence punishable under the Railway Act. When a conspiracy has been determined upon, the conspirators meet, and frequently a rehearsal of the probable trial takes place, in which the false witnesses are examined and cross-examined, every error or blunder being carefully corrected. Truly has Dr. Hunter said that the native of India has reduced the rather perilous business of making out a prima facie case to an exact science.

Many of those who support the Bill know actually very little of India. A thorough knowledge of the people cannot properly be obtained without mixing with them, and this the advisers of the Government have not time to do. Sir E. Baring, in an article to the Nineteenth Century, says that the present agitation is not so much against the Bill as it is against the general policy which for many years past has been adopted in India. Sir E. Baring has been too short a time in India to know the feelings of the Europeans thoroughly. I have been in India nineteen years, and travelled nearly all over it, and beg respectfully to assure Sir Evelyn that he is mistaken. I have laboured hard along with many English artisans and railway employees and others to advance the interests of the natives. We have been trying to bring the humble native and English workman together, because we believe that if any good is to be done for India it must be done through the masses—the working classes. We have been working at the foundation while the Government has been toiling at the superstructure, and, in homely language, it wants to put the roof on before the walls are built. The working men of India have always been law-abiding; but the manner in which they have been ignored and their personal safety disregarded is creating an angry, discontented feeling, that requires very little more to cause it to find expression in a manner that every one would deplore. I have heard expressions made use of by men who fought before the walls of Delhi that I dare not repeat. They cause me to shudder when I think of the earnestness with which they were uttered.—Yours obediently,

1, Whitefriars-street, London.

F. T. ATKINS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—Mr. Roper Lethbridge has addressed you as hon. secretary of the London Committee of Anglo-Indians formed to protest against Mr. Ilbert's Bill. Will you allow me, therefore, as hon. secretary of the British India Committee formed to support Mr. Ilbert's Bill in particular, and the Marquis of Ripon's policy in general, to state that our committee also is formed on a strictly non-political basis, and that we have no idea of absolutely identifying ourselves with either of the great political parties in the State? Though, doubtless, for obvious reasons, which it would not be courteous to specify, we have so far received more sympathy and support from members of Parliament and others holding Liberal views than from those of Conservative opinions, we shall be too glad to welcome as supporters of Mr. Ilbert's Bill and of Lord Ripon's policy any number of "sensible Tories" that may send in their names to us. Disclaiming sentiment and trusting entirely to the results of experience and practical knowledge, we have every confidence in the common sense, manliness, honour, and love of justice of the English public, qualities which we should be sorry to think were not in a large degree to be found among Conservatives.

In regard to Mr. Atkins, of Allahabad, though we have no authority to speak for Liberal associations, we doubt not they will be very glad to afford a fair and impartial hearing both to him and to those who may endeavour to answer him.—Faithfully yours,

GEORGE FOGGO.

[FROM THE "TIMES."]

WE publish this morning an interesting letter from Mr. F. T. Atkins, who, as our readers are aware, has come to this country as the representative of English working men in India to protest against the passing of the Ilbert Bill. There is reason to fear that in the minds of those who support that measure in England its typical Indian opponent figures as a wealthy and arrogant planter, accustomed to domineer in a lordly manner over all who do not possess a purse as long as his own, and to treat with tenfold contempt such as further offend his prejudices by belonging to a different race. When the great heart of the people has to be roused, or when a sentimental orator wishes merely to lash himself into a proper reforming temper, arguments ad invidiam invariably occupy a very prominent position. It is, therefore, a useful contribution to the general stock of ideas when Mr. Atkins comes forward to show that the Ilbert Bill effects our humbler fellow-citizens in India, alike British and native, much more than the well-to-do classes. The fact is that wealthy people, even when their Liberalism is of the most unexceptionable purity, always manage to shield themselves from the worst consequences of any social disorder. The haughty nabob who haunts the popular imagination does not need to expose himself to the dangers of the mofussil. He can live in a Presidency town or in England and leave his agents to bear the brunt of local grievances, just as an Irish landlord, though he may suffer reduction of his income, can always, if he wishes, find proxies to receive the more personal attentions of his tenants. It is the people who work for their living with hands or brains, and are tied to the spot where that living has to be made, upon whom the disagreeable incidents of life press with inexorable severity. For one planter who can be reached by native perjury or unjustly sentenced by a native magistrate scores of poor men will suffer. The improvement of India depends not only upon the exertions of the gentlemen who issue edicts from the salubrious retreat of Simla, but also upon the existence of a great body of obscure Englishmen scattered throughout the length and breadth of the country and forming the indispensable channels through which the influence of English civilisation is brought to bear upon every department of Indian life. To these men the security for life, property, and character which they enjoy under the present system is of infinitely greater importance than to people whom wealth or official position saves from actual contact with the populace.

The veracity, which among ourselves is the very basis of character, is unknown among Orientals. It is not merely that they frequently or even habitually fail to speak the truth, but that they are absolutely unconscious of any obligation to speak it at all. They do not hold that speech was given to man either to disclose or to conceal his thoughts, but simply as a tool wherewith to gain his ends. If perjury be required to add emphasis to their testimony, they perjure themselves without the slightest compunction. They are not so much immoral in this respect as absolutely non-moral. They sin against no law that they recognise, because the idea of veracity has never entered their minds. Aiming only at producing a given effect agreeable to themselves and knowing no distinction of means, they naturally arrange circumstances as well as words in the way best suited to attain their ends. Hence, as Mr. Atkins points out, a European may at any moment become the victim of a conspiracy elaborated with a degree of skill which can never be attained among any people that recognises a moral distinction between truth and falsehood. If a Bengali wants half-a-dozen witnesses to swear that they saw an Englishman commit a murder, he has only to hire them as we would hire men to dig a garden; and if a dead body is wanted to strengthen the case, it will be forthcoming. The main safeguard for Englishmen has hitherto been the common sense of their English judges, who test circumstantial evidence by the general probabilities of the case. If any one will honestly try to put himself in the place of an Englishman at some lonely station marked out by his nationality and by the discharge of his daily duty for the amity of the natives, it will readily be seen that the proposed change in the law legitimately excites other feelings than mere pride and jealousy of race. It is said that native judges are as capable as English ones of disentangling truth from falsehood; but if those who say this occupied positions offering opportunities of testing its truth in their own persons, we strongly suspect that they would be the first to insist upon avoiding all unnecessary risks. It is very easy for railway-delegates at home to put the whole thing aside with some empty platitudes about equality, but railway servants in India have very good reason to shrink from being handed over to a native court crammed with native accusers and presided over by a native judge. Even if residence in England and an English education were held to remove every reasonable objection to native judges, the fact remains that men who have enjoyed these advantages are rare and are yearly becoming rarer. We publish to-day a letter from "An Indian Official," which rightly insists upon maintaining a distinction which Mr. W. W. Hunter in a recent letter endeavoured to obliterate. The writer, who speaks with authority upon the questions at issue between Mr. Hunter and the judges of the High Court, holds that no legislative language can efface a distinction of fact. The statutory civilians differ more widely from men appointed after competitive examination in England than does a justice of the peace in this country from one of Her Majesty's judges. If any documents can be cited which ignore the difference, we can only regret that so little wisdom frequently goes to their production.

Even Mr. Hunter gave countenance in his letter to the mischievous fallacy embodied in the phrase "people of India." Mr. Atkins does good service in pointing out once more that there is no people of India, and that those who now seek power to try Europeans do not, in any sense, represent the mass of the population. They are, as we have again and again insisted—and as no one ventures categorically to deny, though so many speak as if they could—a small section or caste of a single race, and that not by any means the finest or most manly race in India. They are not even representative of their own race, for they belong to a proud and exclusive aristocracy, which aims only at regaining its old power over inferior castes. The men who have got the ear of the Indian Government and upon the satisfaction of whose demands the loyalty of the Indian populations is absurdly said to depend, no more represent their own province than an Ulster landowner represents the peasantry of Connaught, and no more represent India than a Magyar noble represents the Austro-Hungarian Empire. No doubt, a certain small section of the Indian population has been taught to imagine that it has some share in the advancement of a few Baboos at the expense of Englishmen; but a very brief experience of the domination of its old rulers would suffice to change its views. As for the great mass of the heterogeneous races that inhabit India, they know a great deal less about the clatter of Bengali newspapers than the people of this country themselves. The Ilbert Bill, in fact, proposes to take away from Englishmen in India the valued and valuable privilege of being tried by their own countrymen, in order to gratify the pride of vanity of a small caste, which has no sympathy whatever with any other section of the inhabitants of India. It is a doubtful boon even for its recipients, and it is none at all for our Indian fellow-subjects at large. It will secure neither their loyalty nor their gratitude, though it may echo in their bazaars as a great surrender to the most effeminate of races. We can scarcely be surprised if Englishmen resent this withdrawal from them of a cherished privilege by a Government which carefully maintains a hundred invidious distinctions between class and class. The language of the resolutions, telegraphed by our Calcutta correspondent, is regrettably violent, but the projected change is keenly resented, and the language which Bengali papers have been emboldened to use is of the most exasperating kind. The Government has been warned by its own officials that the Ilbert Bill will not be workable in face of the opposition of the European population, and the resolutions go to show that the hostility it has excited is no mere flash of sentimental annoyance, as some would have had us believe. [Mr. Atkins only confirms everything that we have yet heard upon the subject when he assures us that the European working classes in India are inspired by feelings of the keenest resentment at the attack upon the safeguards they prize. As for official opinion, it is not too much to say that the Indian Government has not succeeded in obtaining a simple, unqualified, and cordial assent to its proposals from a single Englishman practically acquainted with Indian life. Many are afraid to be suspected of hostility to the policy of associating the natives with ourselves in the administration, and so convey their dissent from the Bill in ingeniously modified ways. But, with all the weight of Government influence and popular clamour on its side the measure has failed, to elicit thoroughgoing and unhesitating approval from any English official in India. Mr. Fogg, in a letter we publish to-day, tries to traverse Mr. Roper Lethbridge's assertion of the partisan character of the support given to the Bill in this country. But he is obliged to ignore the fact that, while Liberals who know India co-operate, in spite of their party feelings, with Conservatives who also know India in opposing the Bill, its supporters are mostly men who do not know India and are always found in the forefront of every partisan and doctrinaire agitation.]

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

(From the Bombay Gazette of Sept. 28.)

Referring to the new orders about cavalry uniform for Bombay, we think the disappearance of the familiar—and very handsome—blue and silver from the Bombay Cavalry will certainly be regretted, though the new uniform seems well adapted for the cavalry as a body. Let us hope that the change will be final. One of the commonest and most reasonable complaints among officers now a days seems to be that they are constantly being put to the expense of getting new uniform. The light blue and silver is now to be replaced by dark green and gold with red livery-bands; helmets are to be worn, but for regimental parades the yare to be covered with the native officers' loongies. The whole thing looks well on paper but we shall doubtless hear how it answers when it comes to be taken into wear. It seems that all the regiments of the Bombay Cavalry are now to be dressed exactly alike, and in this case the somewhat gorgeous trappings of the Sind Horse will disappear from the scene.

The rules under which officers of the General List are to succeed to their colonels' allowances have been published, and are, we think, fairly liberal. The lists of the three Presidencies are to be amalgamated, and thirteen officers of this amalgamated list will always be entitled to the off- reckonings. That is to say, when the thirteen officers who now head the list have completed one after the other their qualifying service of twelve years as substantive Lieutenant Colonel, they will get the off- reckonings, and as they die off their juniors on the list will obtain the vacated allowances. The calculation is arrived at in the following manner. In 1862, the General List officers numbered as follows:—Bengal, 222; Madras, 108; Bombay, 68—total 398; and one colonel's allowance was allowed for every thirty officers. At present the number of General List officers in the three Presidencies is as follows:—Bengal, 125; Madras, 53; Bombay, 32; total 210. Among these 210 officers there are, as we said before, 13 colonels' allowances given, and a thinga go, we consider the proportion a fairly liberal one.

In regard to officers who joined the Staff Corps after Sept. 12, 1868, and before July 1, 1881, they are still kept on separate Presidential lists, and the calculation for them to succeed to the off- reckonings has been made in the same manner as for the General List, that is to say, in the proportion of one colonel's allowance to each thirty officers. This gives the following total number of colonels' allowances to each Presidency:—Bengal, twenty; Madras, six; Bombay, seven; total, thirty-three. It is to be noted that after the allotted number of officers, both of the General List and the Staff Corps (Class IV.), have attained their off- reckonings by putting in the necessary qualifying service, those who follow them will succeed to their allowances irrespective of qualifying service. We do not imagine that this will affect officers of the General List much, as they are all about the same length of service, but it seems to offer a good chance of speedy retirement to some lucky officers who joined the Staff Corps about 1880. For officers who entered the Staff Corps after July 1, 1881, there are to be no off- reckonings, and so this time-honoured and curious institution will die a natural death.

We see by the last issue of general orders that at the recent class of musketry, held at Poona, no fewer than fifty-nine native officers and non-commissioned officers have passed the examination held at the close of the course. Of these four subedars, nine jemadars, and four havildars passed "with credit." It is a curious fact that of those who passed, two subedars and four havildars were examined vis à voce, as they could not write. This is, indeed, the pursuit of knowledge under difficulties, and reflects great credit on men who thus acquire such a satisfactory knowledge of a difficult branch of their profession, in spite of the drawbacks of a defective education. The best among all that passed is Havildar Sheikh Abdool Rayman, of the 16th Regiment N.I., who has against his name the remark "1st in the class." Eleven non-commissioned officers passed an examination (voluntary) in lecturing and altogether the musketry class appears to have been a most satisfactory one, judging by its results. We hope the effects of all this study of musketry will be seen in the approaching shooting season, and that the figure of merit of the Bombay Army will show an appreciable increase.

This is now the second year that a school of musketry has been held in Poona. Last year the Government of India were very angry about it, because they had not been consulted, and because there was a small bill to pay in connection with the journeying to and fro of the native ranks who attended the class. The bill was at length paid under protest, but it was distinctly stated that no money would be forthcoming again for such a frivolous purpose as musketry instruction. However, General Hardinge was not to be thwarted in his efforts to impart instruction to the army he commands, and as Government allows a certain number of men per regiment free passage to Poona for the Central Rifle Meeting, advantage was ingeniously taken of this to hold the musketry class in connection with the Rifle Meeting, thus killing two birds with one stone. This is all very satisfactory and creditable from one point of view, but there is a decided drawback to the energy and activity of the Bombay military authorities. If they show the Government of India that they can hold musketry classes that cost nothing, and have minor camps of exercise without any expense, may there not in future always be a difficulty in getting any supplies for these laudable purposes? We believe that Bombay is the only Presidency in which anything of the sort has been attempted.

The following is the programme of His Excellency the Commander in Chief's (Sir Donald Stewart) winter tour:—Oct. 24, leave Simla for Subathu; 26th, arrive Dharumpora; 27th, visit Dughskai; 28th, reach Kasauli and remain three days; 30th, reach Umballa and remain three days. Nov. 1, reach Bhatnagar, where the camp will be formed on Oct. 26; thence to Banda on Nov. 3, at which place His Excellency joins the camp. Leaving Banda on Nov. 4, Sir Donald Stewart will proceed by stages to Karaili via Nowgong (Nov. 9), Saugor (Nov. 23, 24, and 25). After the break-up of the camp at Karaili on Dec. 4, His Excellency will proceed by rail to Calcutta, starting on Dec. 5, and halting en route at Pachmarhi on the two following days. On the 9th he will reach Jubbulpore, where he will remain two days, and on the 12th Allahabad, where he will halt for a day. Leaving Allahabad on Dec. 13 at 8.20 a.m., His Excellency should reach Calcutta at 5.50 the next morning.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will be accompanied on his tour by Major General Sir George Greaves, Adjutant General; Major General Sir Charles Macgregor, Quartermaster General; Major H. Ford, First Assistant Adjutant General; Colonel Gosset, Officiating Military Secretary; and the Personal Staff.

A Quetta correspondent writes to a Kurrachee paper that a military touring movement of some importance is arranged for the month of November. Sir Robert Sandeman, accompanied by a column, consisting of 200 men of the 2nd Grenadiers and 80 sabres of the Sind Horse, will leave Quetta on the 5th of November for Ketch Mekran. The tour, it is believed, will be extended as far as the Belooch coast, and the troops will return to Quetta by way of Kurrachee. A regiment of the 3rd Native Light Infantry, with a battery of Artillery, will also proceed to Thul Chotiali early in November.

General Sir Charles Macgregor receives the good-service pension available by General R. S. Hill's succession to colonel's allowance.

Colonel T. E. Hughes, Royal Artillery, well known on the Bombay side as a smart artillery officer, succeeds General Napier Campbell as Inspector General of Ordnance, Bengal.

Colonel P. H. Harcourt, R.A., has been granted eight months' leave to England.

It is stated that Colonel Stansfield, Commandant, Northern Bengal Railway Volunteers, will hand over the command of the corps to Major Nicolay, Officiating Commandant of the Presidency Volunteers.

The following lieutenant colonels to be colonels:—C. J. Jennings and C. A. De Kantzow.

The following officers are granted furlough out of India:—Lieut. Col. F. H. Jenkins, one year and ten days; Captain A. de C. Rennie, two years; Surgeon Major W. E. Allon, one year and fifteen days; Surgeon G. A. Emerson, one year.

Major Robbins, 1st West Riding Regiment, has been appointed to the adjutancy of the 2nd Volunteer Battalion of that regiment.

Major Burton Brown, R.A., proceeds from Meerut to Ran-goon to join 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, North Irish Division, to which he has been transferred; and Lieut. H. G. Pelly, R.H.A., from Jullunder to Kirkee, to join D Battery, B Brigade.

Major C. O. W. Apperley, lately attached to the 15th B.C., is posted to Umballa for general duty.

The following captains are promoted to be majors in the Bengal Staff Corps:—C. H. Stoddart, J. G. Kelly, and H. Y. Mint.

Captain M. R. Wyer's promotion to be major in the Bombay Volunteer Corps, vice Major Bayley, promoted to colonel, is notified in the Bombay Government Gazette.

Captain Baird, West Yorkshire Regiment, and Captain Kempster, Leinster Regiment, proceed home to join the 1st and 2nd Battalions of their regiments respectively.

Captain G. D. Fanshawe, R.A., proceeds from Ferozepore to Agra to join No. 5 Battery, 1st Brigade, Southern Division.

Captains Griffin and Byre, Norfolk Regiment, are permitted to exchange into the 2nd and 1st Battalions respectively.

Captains J. W. Thurburn, H. B. Rich, and F. W. Watkins, Royal Engineers, will be coming out very shortly for duty in the Bengal Presidency.

Captain and Paymaster O. M. Johnson, 2nd Battalion the Prince of Wales's North Staffordshire Regiment (98th Foot), now on leave in England on private affairs, will not return to India on the expiration of his leave, he having been posted to the home establishment.

The following transfers of gunners are ordered:—Lieut. H. G. Pelly from H-1 R.A. to D-B R.H.A.; Lieut. Owen from A-2 R.A. to London Division; Lieut. Lyall from 5-1 North Irish Division to 1-1 Southern Division; Lieut. Randolph from 3-1 Scottish Division to 5-1 Scottish Division.

Lieut. C. H. Woodhouse, officiating wing officer, 17th Bombay N.I., is attached to the 10th N.I. as a temporary measure.

Lieutenant the Honourable A. Sidney, I Battery, B Brigade R.A., is promoted Captain and joins No. 8 Battery, 1st Brigade, Scottish Division.

Lieutenant Blewitt, R.A., is promoted from D-B, R.H.A., as Captain in No. 6 Battery, 1st Brigade, Western Division, R.A., at Morar.

The following officers of the Army Medical Department serving in Bengal, having completed a tour of foreign service, will proceed to England during the ensuing trooping season:—Brigade-Surgeon T. Rudd; Surgeon-Major J. Good, J. Daltera, H. Scott, W. Venour, O. E. Smith, J. Ferguson, S. G. White, G. W. McNulty, J. E. Fannin, J. Langdom, W. Mac Watters, G. C. Irving, J. W. Morgan, M. M. Galloway, and P. T. Frazer; Surgeons A. W. Browne, R. D. Hodson, C. K. Powell, J. Armstrong, P. M. Ellis, P. J. O'Sullivan, and A. S. Young.

Lieutenant O. A. S. Montgomery, Wing Officer of the 8th Bombay N.I., is transferred to the 1st (Grenadiers) N.I., as Wing Officer.

Lieutenant E. C. Owen, officiating Wing Officer, 26th Bombay N.I., on probation, has been appointed officiating Wing Officer of the 12th N.I., on probation.

Lieutenant P. P. Legh, officiating Wing Officer, 9th Bombay N.I., is transferred to the 26th N.I., as Wing Officer.

Lieutenant H. Surre, 3rd N. L. I., has been granted two months' leave to Poona on medical certificate.

Lieutenant MacPherson, 2nd Seaforth Highlanders, has been appointed to the 2nd Goorkhas as a probationer for the Staff Corps.

Lieutenants Templar, Durham Light Infantry, and Hamilton, West Riding Regiment, have been removed to the 1st Battalions of their regiments; and Lieutenant Fry, West Yorkshire Regiment, to the 2nd Battalion.

Lieutenant Edwards, Berkshire Regiment, is posted to the 2nd Battalion.

The transfer of Lieutenant Neville from the 1st to the 2nd Battalion, Cheshire Regiment, has been cancelled.

Lieutenant Donne has been appointed interpreter of the 2nd Norfolk, vice Percy.

Lieutenants Charles John Corfield and Alexander Hamilton, both of the King's Own Borderers, are admitted to the Bengal Staff Corps.

Mr. F. Hutchinson is gazetted Lieutenant in the Bombay Volunteer Corps. Lieutenant Hutchinson succeeds Lieutenant Adams Smith in G Company, Poona.

Lance Duffadar Upar Singh and Trumpeter Sarain Singh, of the 13th Bengal Lancers, are gazetted to the 3rd Class of the Order of Merit, "for bravery displayed by them at Kassassin on Sept. 9, 1882."

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson state that the chief feature in our markets has been an improved demand for coffee; owing to the reactionary movement in New York and on the Continent. Some advance has been paid for Rio to arrive. Other descriptions firmer, and to-day fine colory plantation Ceylon brought higher prices. The sale on account of the Netherlands Trading Company is fixed for Wednesday, the 17th inst., to comprise 114,203 bags, 205 cases, a very large portion consisting of ordinary coffee, valuations for which are rather less than were obtained during the previous month. In October last year the supply was 27,500 bags less. There was an excited market for rice towards the close of last week, with extensive transactions in Burmah cargoes at a further slight recovery in quotations. The market is now quiet. China tea remains exceedingly dull, notwithstanding smaller public sales with occasionally easier rates for red leaf Congou. The quantity of Indian brought forward has not been so heavy as of late, but trade is quiet and prices again show weakness. The public sale of cinnamon already referred to was held after the usual spice sales yesterday, and although some of the leading buyers did not attend, the entire quantity offered, 190 bales, sold at August prices to a slight decline. Cassia Lignea again lower. White pepper, although unusually high, is still getting dearer. Cinchona has been in moderate demand at about previous rates.

COFFEE.—A firm market, and a few lots of fine colory Plantation Ceylon went at full prices, 105 casks, 40 barrels and bags sold—small 63s. to 65s. 6d.; greyish, 74s.; middling to good middling colory, 78s. 6d. to 83s.; fine, 84s. 6d. to 87s.; bold, 96s. to 101s.; 84 casks 326 bags East India, part sold, 73s. to 80s.

INDIGO.—The sales of East India closed to-day, 3,900 chests having sold out of 6,660 declared. The following in reference to the market is from Messrs. Patry and Pasteur's Circular:—The report of unfavourable weather, and the reduced crop estimates received from Calcutta early in August, gave rise to a spurt in our market, and a few hundred chests, consisting chiefly of Kurpahs, changed hands at about 3d. advance on July values, but as crop prospects very shortly improved again the activity soon died out, and for some time previous to the opening of these sales, very little business was reported, and the advance was practically lost. The crop estimates have meanwhile gradually improved from 125,000 maunds to 140,000, at which latter figure they now stand, and apparently with a probability of some further increase, the weather now being satisfactory. At the same time the supply of Kurpah continues large, and, as on the whole, prospect for the coming crop of that description are also fairly good, the prices established at these sales are quite as high as the position of the article would seem to warrant. The Bengals and Oudes comprised in the catalogues, consisting mainly of remnants of parcels and second-hand goods. Prices have, as usual, shown much irregularity, but in the average we quote as follows, as compared with the July sale:—Bengal, shipping par to 2d. advance; consuming par to 3d. decline. Oudes and Plant Oudes, good fully par; ordinary par to 2d. decline. Kurpah.—The supply offered was unexpectedly large, but the assortment inferior, the great bulk consisting of undesirable mixed kinds valued from about 3s. 3d. downwards, while of good and fine there was a complete absence, and very little even of middling quality; we quote:—Shipping kinds par to 3d. advance; good consuming about par; ordinary consuming 2d. to 4d. decline. Dry leaf Madras.—The supply was large and the quality above the average of recent sales, the demand, however, has been extremely good, and an unusual proportion of the quantity offered found buyers; we quote:—Good and fine par to 2d. advance; middling and ordinary par; low par to 2d. decline.

THE "ZETETIC" TREATMENT OF MEDICINE, ON THE BASIS OF FREE PHOSPHEROUS.

This system, founded by Dr. BIRLEY after over half a century's experience and research, is commended to the notice of all seeking the restoration or maintenance of health. About twenty different compounds have already been tabulated suitable for most diseases.

The "Zetetic" treatment is particularly adapted to the restoration of health impaired by foreign climates, or exhaustive duties.

The "Ironised" Phosphorus is largely used by those whose profession entails arduous work.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1883.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Oct. 5; Madras and Allahabad, Oct. 4; Calcutta, Oct. 2.

SOME ONE has let the cat out of the bag too soon; and so, possibly, a nice little game may have been irretrievably spoilt. The announcement made by the Civil and Military Gazette, and telegraphed by the Times correspondent on Monday, that Mr. Hunter is to be the President of a Law Commission as soon as he ceases to be President of the Education Commission, is contradicted "on official authority" by the Times correspondent on Tuesday.

This is all very well—and doubtless means that the arrangement is not yet completed, and may not come off. But of course it is well known that Mr. Hunter's present occupation, as the Reformer of the Indian educational system, will soon be gone, and he naturally seeks new worlds to conquer. The statement of the Civil and Military Gazette is far too precise, to have no better foundation than mere rumour. It states that the commission is to consider—

"First, whether the institution of so-called Statutory Civilians is a success; secondly, whether Lord Lytton's rules for the admission of native civilians should be revised or altered; thirdly, how far practising members of the English Bar, irrespective of nationality, can be drafted into the higher judicial appointments, and how far practising pleaders of the High Courts can be utilised for the same purpose in the subordinate judicial services; and, fourthly, whether further means can be adopted to improve the acquirements of the pleaders, and to establish a uniform system of public prosecutors for the whole country.

This is one of the first fruits of the Ilbert Bill; and means that Lord Lytton's scheme for giving one-sixth of the appointments in the Covenanted Civil Service to Native gentlemen of good birth, is to be "re-considered."

THE "Land Improvement Act" just passed seems to cut the ground away from under Sir William Wedderburn's scheme of land banks. For though the Act licenses private banks to lend money under the Act, with the same privileges of summary recovery as are enjoyed by the State, it is probable that few banks will care to compete with the State.

THE Punjab District Boards Act—that is, Local Self-Government Act—is stated to "leave a large discretion to the Provincial Administration as to the arrangements to be made," &c. Of course; this has been characteristic of Lord Ripon throughout. Make the largest and most exuberant promises that human gullibility is at all likely to swallow,—ensure the popularity of the Viceroy—and then leave the "arrangements to be made," or the unpopular and shabby-looking precautions to be taken, to the "discretion" of the local Governments, or somebody else. The result is delightful, except for the local Governments; for if they fulfil the promises and come to grief, they can be wigged by the Viceroy; and if they do not fulfil them, their meanness will be evident to all the world, as a foil to the noble generosity of the head of the Government of India.

THERE has been fighting at Delhi between Hindus and Musalmans—another instance of the prevalent impression of the weakness of the Government.

WE would direct the attention of English Liberals to the letters that are appearing in the Sheffield Daily Telegraph on the subject of the Ilbert Bill, from the pen of Mr. James Wilson, proprietor and late editor of the Indian Daily News. Mr. Wilson is a Liberal of the Liberals, and indeed belongs, in home politics, to the strictest sect of that persuasion.

THE letter, too, of Mr. Phillips, a Nonconformist Missionary in Bengal, who calls himself a "Liberal of the Birmingham School," which appears in this week's Nonconformist, ought to open the eyes of thoughtful Liberals to the enormity of the blunder—we will not say the crime—they will perpetrate, if they allow themselves as a party to be carried away by the silly sentimentality of Mr. Ilbert and the popularity-hunting of Lord Ripon in India, and the noisy factiousness of an insignificant Radical clique at home.

MR. ATKINS, the delegate of the Indian working-men, is to address a meeting at the Aquarium on the Ilbert Bill on Friday evening, if Mr. Foggo and his friends will allow him to be heard. The meeting is, we understand, virtually an open one, being organised by the popular scientific association called the Balloon Society; so doubtless Lord Ripon's zealous friends of the Caucus—who (as the Manchester Courier admitted last week) have made elaborate preparations for following Mr. Atkins about with a cut-and-dried resolution approved by Mr. Schnadhorst—will appear in force. We trust that every Anglo-Indian, who is able to do so, will attend the meeting, if only to bear witness to the modus operandi of these gentlemen; whose determination to suppress free speech, merely because it criticises a Radical Viceroy, is one of the most disgraceful instances of the present moral degradation of the Radical party.

EXETER, fortunately, seems to have been too far a-field for the gentlemen of the Caucus; so the meeting there of last Friday was a most successful and enthusiastic one. The pleasant county of Devon, with its comparatively warm and mild climate, has always been the favourite resort of returned Anglo-Indians; and its inhabitants are consequently already accustomed to discussions on Indian affairs, and know something more about India than Mr. Schnadhorst's friends at Birmingham.

THE first meeting of the East India Association after the recess will be occupied with Lord Ripon's introduction of the worst evils of recent Irish land legislation into Bengal. Very few of the warmest supporters of Mr. Gladstone's policy in Ireland supported that policy on its general merits. Mr. Gladstone himself was never tired of declaring that it was an exceptional policy, only to be justified by the very exceptional character of the political situation in Ireland. Will Lord Ripon say that the political situation in Bengal is similarly exceptional?

AN exceedingly interesting meeting of that ever-useful and energetic society, the National Indian Association, is to take place at 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, on Monday afternoon next, October 29, at 4 p.m. The subject to the fore will be one of special importance, that of "Medical Women for India." Apart altogether from the gracious interest which Her Majesty the Queen takes in the question—which would in itself be sufficient to commend it to the careful consideration of every loyal Anglo-Indian—the famous letter of the Maharani of Panna, and many other striking and pathetic incidents, have taught us all that this movement is a step in the right direction, and promises to do much towards the supplying of a great and urgent need felt by our Indian sisters. Mr. Kittredge has just come to England from America, on his return to India; and the two ladies whose salaries have already been guaranteed will shortly follow Mr. Kittredge to Bombay, so that it is well that all those interested in the movement should attend this meeting, to take counsel together before the pioneers leave England.

WE gladly made a very necessary amende, both to the Government and to General Sir Henry Norman, for a mis-statement in our last week's issue, in reference to the appointment of the latter distinguished officer to the Governorship of Jamaica. Our note on the appointment in no way depreciated the obviously great claims of Sir Henry Norman; but we referred to a rumour that Sir Henry had been converted to the principles of the Ilbert Bill, and we attributed to that fact the readiness of the Government to acknowledge those claims. We are now assured on excellent authority—though not by Sir Henry Norman, nor by any one authorised by him—that the whole story is absolutely without foundation; and that Sir Henry Norman at present disapproves of the Ilbert Bill as strongly as ever he did, though of course his official position prevents that opinion from being generally known. We have not been asked to make the correction, but we do it with great pleasure, both for the sake of our own accuracy, and because it may serve to check a good many similar rumours that are flying about in connection with this most unhappy Bill.

The Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending Oct. 5:—Major Frederick G. F. Moore, paymaster, 2nd Battalion Royal Fusiliers; Surgeon Major R. Jackson, A.M.D., in charge of the Pachmari Medical Depot; Lieut. and Adj. A. Waters, 1st (King's) Dragoon Guards; Mr. C. F. Anderson, district superintendent of police; Mr. William Mylne Kelly, late pensioned deputy collector and magistrate, Surat; Shums-ood-Deen, youngest son of the Ameer of Afghanistan; Captain D. Dinwiddie, R.A.

[Our usual Market Reports had not arrived when we went to press.]

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following is the official summary of the reports of the Revenue and Agricultural Department on the state of the season and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending Sept. 25:—

"During the week under report the weather has been fair over the greater part of India, and the rainfall correspondingly light. In the Madras Presidency and Mysore the dry crops in several districts are suffering from want of rain. In the Bombay Presidency the fall has been light and unequally distributed, and more is needed in Guzerat and the Southern Mahratta country. In Hyderabad and the Berars, on the other hand, the rainfall has been excessive, and a break would be beneficial. No rain fell in Sind during the week, and the river was, on Sept. 24, 5 ft. below the previous year's level. In Central India and Rajputana light but general rain continues, and prospects are improving. In British Burma, Assam, and Bengal the rainfall has been light, but the weather continues seasonable, and rice and other crops are progressing favourably, except in Behar and Central Bengal, where the crops on high lands need more rain. Heavy rain fell in the southern and eastern districts of the Central Provinces, and benefitted the rice crop, but slightly injured the cotton and millets. In the North-Western Provinces and Oudh the rainfall has been generally light, and confined to the early part of the week. The weather is now clear, and in several districts more rain is needed; but on the whole agricultural prospects are fair. No rain appears to have fallen during the week in the Punjab, but prospects there are reported to be fair or good. Harvesting of millets and oil-seeds continues in Madras and Mysore; rice and the earlier kharif crops are being cut in Bombay; and the land is under preparation for the rabi. The damage from locusts in the Deccan has not proved as serious as was anticipated. Reaping of the kharif and ploughing and sowing for the rabi are also more or less in progress throughout North-Western and Central India. In Bengal the harvesting of early rice and jute is nearly finished, the outturn being, with some exceptions, fair. Cattle-disease is decreasing in Burma, and is slight elsewhere. A few deaths from cholera are still reported, and fever is somewhat prevalent, otherwise the public health has much improved."

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WEALTH OF ASSAM.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—We are apt to think that all the wealth of Assam consists in tea, but private enterprise is proving what has been known to Government for forty years past, that out of the mines of Assam can be raised coal excellent in quality and practically unlimited in quantity.

In 1842 Mr. Robinson, in his work on Assam, remarked that the beds of limestone and coal are of very great extent, and, if worked, there is every reason to suppose they will lead to very important results in the advancement of the country.

So far back as 1828 a boat-load of coal from the banks of the Saffrai river, a tributary of the Disang, was sent down to Calcutta, and pronounced to be equal to English coal, and the best ever found in India.

On May 4 last Captain A. K. Abbott submitted a full report, which has been printed. On page 13 a very interesting account is given of the Ledo and Tikak collieries. The present output of the Ledo colliery is 200 tons a week, and it is expected that it will soon be able to turn out 600 or 700 tons a week. The two mines are estimated to produce more than forty millions of tons in the space comprised between the Namdang and Ledo rivers. East of the Ledo and south of the Tirap are coalmines between Kherimgaon and Watto. West of the Namdang River coal has been found on the banks of the Dirak, and further westward, near Jaipoor. Between North latitude 26deg. 45min. and 27deg. 45min., and between East longitude 95deg. 10min. and 95deg. 45min., lies coal in sufficient quantities to supply Indian railways for a hundred years to come, at cheap prices; the great Brahmaputra River offering the best means of carriage from Dibrugurh to Calcutta.—Your obedient servant,

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

[From the "TIMES OF INDIA"]

Major J. Baines, Deputy Assistant Adjutant General, Oudh, is allowed to resign his appointment.

Lieutenant Hall, 25th N.I., is selected for the Commissariat Department.

Lieutenant Birch is appointed a Subaltern of the 4th Mountain Battery Frontier Force.

General Bright retains command of the Meerut Division, until relieved by the Duke of Connaught.

Major J. Trotter, 24th P.N.I., is appointed to the Intelligence branch of the Quartermaster General's Department.

Lieutenant Wheeler, Leicestershire Regiment, officiates as Quartermaster General in charge of the Commander-in-Chief's camps during the winter tour.

In the 5th Bengal Cavalry, Lieutenant-Colonel Shakespear, Major Vanranen, and Captain Armstrong each get a step, vice Colonel Musgrave, deceased.

A Madras paper says:—It is believed that General Payn's successor at Bangalore will be Major-General Martin Dillon, C.B., C.S.I., an excellent soldier, and well remembered in India as Lord Napier of Magala's Military Secretary. Major-General Dillon has just vacated his appointment as Assistant Military Secretary at the Horse Guards.

A contemporary hears that instructions have reached Simla from the Horse Guards to the effect that whenever staff officers who have not served ten months in their appointments require leave under special and urgent circumstances, their cases are to be sent home for the consideration of his Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief.

The head quarters and right wing, 1st Regiment Madras Pioneers, consisting of three European officers, eight native officers, 345 rank and file, forty-six followers and three horses will arrive at Sassoon Dock by a special train from Poona at 5 a.m., on the 4th instant, and be embarked at once on board the Indian Government ship Czarewitch, which will leave the Kurrachee, towed by the steamer Dagmar as soon as possible.

A contemporary is informed that in consequence of the scanty rainfall and scarcity of forage this year in Rajputana, the movement of the 1st Bombay Lancers by route-march through that province, en route to Quetta, has been countermanded, and that the regiment will probably proceed by rail from Nussereabad to Rehri, as an unavoidable alternative.

The Pioneer says:—We announced the other day that the Military Member of Council and the Inspector General of Military Works would pay a visit to the Sukkur Bridge during the touring season; and we now hear that directions have been given that the defences of the bridge are to be taken into consideration at once, with a view to their being constructed by the railway staff while the bridge itself is being built and as a portion of the general plan of the work. An example of such alacrity as this in any matter connected with the subject of defences is all the more welcome from its extreme rarity.

CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LONDON, AND CHINA.—The directors in their half-yearly statement of accounts to June 30 last, show a net profit, after making provision for bad and doubtful debts, of £22,904. An interim dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum (free of income tax) is now declared, leaving a balance of £4,154, which is carried forward to the next account. The necessity for making the large provision for bad and doubtful debts, shown in the accounts, has arisen mainly from the failure of a firm at Cocouada, by which the bank has suffered to the extent of about £15,000. The report was adopted.

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated Oct. 21 :—

"The Simla session of the Supreme Legislative Council is now at an end, and the next meeting of that body will be held at Calcutta in December next. Among other measures passed at the final sitting is the Land Improvement Act, the provisions of which may be briefly described as follow :—

"It enables the Government to advance money for making improvements on land to any person having the right to make those improvements, or, with the consent of that person, to any other person.

"Secondly, as one main reason given for the reluctance of agriculturists to avail themselves of loans is the delay caused by the making of elaborate inquiries, it is left optional with the officer to whom application is made to issue a notice calling for objections.

"Thirdly, loans will ordinarily be repayable within thirty-five years, except under certain conditions, when it is seen fit to extend that period.

"Power is also given to the Government to license private banks to lend money under the Act, with the same privileges of summary recovery as are enjoyed by the State. This is really the only novel feature of the measure, the other provisions being mainly intended to simplify the complicated procedure laid down by the former Act of 1871.

"At the same meeting of the Council was passed a measure known as the Punjab District Boards Act, the object of which is the application of the local self-government policy to the Punjab. This Act leaves a large discretion to the provincial administration as to the arrangements to be made for introducing its provisions in the different districts.

"The most notable meeting on the subject of the Ilbert Bill held during last week was one which assembled in Darjeeling on Tuesday. A large number of planters attended, and several resolutions condemning the measure were passed unanimously.

"A serious riot between Hindoos and Mussulmans occurred at Delhi on the 13th inst., on the occasion of the Eedul Zohar festival. A dispute arose about a cow which the Mahomedans wished to slaughter. The Hindoos affirmed that it belonged to a temple, and offered to purchase it for 1,000 rupees; but the Mahomedans declined the offer. An affray then began, and continued until the arrival of the deputy commissioner with a large body of police. Nobody was killed, but several men were severely wounded.

"The Civil and Military Gazette states that a law commission will shortly be appointed, with Dr. Hunter as president, to consider the following subjects :—

"First, whether the institution of so-called statutory civilians is a success; secondly, whether Lord Lytton's rules for the admission of native civilians should be revised or altered; thirdly, how far practising members of the English Bar, irrespective of nationality, can be drafted into the higher judicial appointments, and how far practising pleaders of the High Courts can be utilised for the same purpose in the subordinate judicial services; and, fourthly, whether further means can be adopted to improve the acquirements of the pleaders, and to establish a uniform system of public prosecutors for the whole country.

"The Viceroy and Lady Ripon, with the private and military secretaries and a small suite, left Simla for Cashmere on Tuesday last. It is to be hoped that this visit may have some effect in improving the condition of that most unhappy and misgoverned of the native States.

"Mr. Graham, the gentleman who is about to attempt the ascent of Kinchinjunga, when last heard of, was still at Jhongri, nine days' march from Darjeeling. Nothing, however, has been heard of him since last month, when he was deserted by all his coolies, except three. The supply of stores and money sent to him from Darjeeling was lost through the carelessness of a coolie, who dropped the box over a precipice. It is believed that the party, consisting of Mr. Graham, two Swiss guides, and three coolies, have now nothing to subsist upon except a stock of rice sent out by the Survey Department. Fortunately, that stock is sufficient to prevent any danger of starvation. Every effort is being made at Darjeeling to despatch fresh coolies and supplies; but great difficulty is experienced in the matter, owing to the reluctance of the hillmen to undertake the task and the exorbitant terms which they demand."

THE same correspondent telegraphs, under date Calcutta, Oct. 22 :—

"Mr. Graham and his Swiss guides returned to Darjeeling yesterday evening. He pronounces the ascent of Kinchinjunga from the south impracticable, but he has succeeded in ascending another mountain 24,000ft. high. The statement of the Civil and Military Gazette regarding the formation of a Law Commission, mentioned in my despatch of yesterday, has been officially contradicted."

ANTI-ILBERT BILL MEETING IN EXETER.

A MEETING to protest against the measure commonly known as the Ilbert Bill was held on Friday night at the Royal Public Rooms, under the auspices of the Teignmouth, Exmouth, and East Budleigh Conservative Associations. The large hall was crowded to excess, and the proceedings were of a most enthusiastic description. The chair was occupied by Colonel Walrond, M.P. and among those present were Lord Dunboyne, General Mainwaring, Surgeon-General F. G. Joyat, General Young (Teignmouth), General Goodwyn, General Daniels, General Bartlett (Exmouth), Colonel Tombs (Bishopsteignton), Colonel Ord (Secretary Teignmouth Conservative Association), Colonel Delves, Colonel Tickell (Teignmouth), Colonel Adams (Exmouth), Colonel Peters, Lieut.-Colonel Savile, Colonel Broughton, Major Speid, Major Martyn, Major Claggett, (Exmouth), Captain Elphinstone-Stone, R.N., Captain Kersteman, Captain Thompson, Captain Kent, R.N., Captain Cobham, Rev. H. H. Mayo, Rev. J. Mules, Rev. D. M. Owen (Ideford), Rev. J. Eaves, Rev. H. Brandt, Rev. T. Y. Darling, Rev. Dr. Hillier, Dr. Walker, Messrs. W. E. The CHAIRMAN, who was received with applause, said that his first duty that evening was to read the names of those noblemen and gentlemen who, approving of the meeting, had written to say that they were unable to come among them, and who at the same time regretted very much their inability to be present. Among those who had written were the Earl of Devon, Earl Stanhope, Lord Poltimore, Lord Sidmouth, Hon. Major Addington, Hon. C. W. Bampfylde, Sir John Duckworth, Bart., Sir John Duntze, Bart., Admiral Preedy, Admiral Grenfell (Exmouth), Captain Upton (Exmouth), Rev. W. H. Thornton (Bovey), Rev. H. G. Hayer-Hames (Chagford), Rev. W. G. Mallett, Rev. F. F. Buckingham, Rev. F. T. Salmon, Rev. W. H. D. Purcell (Exmouth), Messrs. H. S. Northcote, O.B., M.P., D. R. Scrutton (Ogwell), W. T. Hallett (Stedcombe), T. D. Studdy, T. H. Knight (Honiton), W. P. Murch (Brixham), D. Evans (Seaton), G. B. Ellicombe (Rocklands), W. C. Rayer, H. F. Mackenzie, W. Barnes (Duryard), George Foster (Exmouth), Farrington, Mallock (Cockington Court), J. Garratt (Bishops Court), De Lisle (Newton Abbot), Gilliard (Black House, Brixham), Cripps (Exmouth), Toms (Kingswear), &c. He would now like to read three letters, and the first he would take was that of Lord Poltimore, who wrote:—

"Court Hall, North Molton, N. Devon, Oct. 16.

"Dear Mr. Peters,—It is with great regret that I shall be unable to be present at your meeting on Friday next to protest against the Ilbert Bill, owing to an engagement of long standing that takes me out of the county on Thursday. I the more deeply regret my enforced absence because I feel strongly on the impolicy of endeavouring to force on that measure, either in its entirety or in a modified form. I trust your meeting will be large and influential: as it is only by such means throughout the country generally that we may hope to prevent the passing of a Bill so unfair to the European community in India, and so disastrous to the prosperity and good government of our Indian Empire. I shall feel obliged if you will hand this letter to your chairman.—Believe me, dear Mr. Peters, yours faithfully, "POLTIMORE."

"Upottery Manor, Honiton, Oct. 18, 1883.

"My dear Mr. Peters,—It is with much regret that I find it will be impossible for me to be present at the meeting to-morrow evening, on account of engagements at home. I am exceedingly pleased, however, to know that the Ilbert Bill is attracting attention in this country. The public in general cares little for what is done in India, unless something in the form of a great war or that a mutiny should crop up, and the great danger is lest the steps by way of experimental legislation leading to such calamities should be taken, almost unnoticed by the people of England. It seems to me almost incredible that any person acquainted with the population of India—anyone who even, like myself, has visited that country without office—should be found to approve such a mischievous policy as that indicated in Lord Ripon's proposed measure. I am told that the (Lord Ripon) is personally extremely popular with the natives, and I cannot avoid the suspicion that the love of popularity, so powerful among Liberal statesmen, may have carried the day over his better judgment.—Yours faithfully, "SIDMOUTH."

(Applause.) His colleague, Sir John Kennaway, would have been present, but he was attending an agricultural meeting at Stockland. His letter ran as follows:—

"Oct. 19, 1883.

"Dear Walrond,—I am very sorry that a long-standing engagement to go to Stockland to-day will prevent my supporting you to-night in the protest which East Devon and Exeter is to make against the Ilbert Bill. I hope that the voice of the country will make itself heard so plainly that the Bill will be speedily withdrawn, though I fear the mischievous consequences caused by its introduction will not so readily be effaced.—Believe me, yours truly, "J. H. KENNAWAY."

After appealing for a fair and patient hearing for the speakers, the chairman went on to say that they were met to reason why they protested against the Ilbert Bill from Messrs. C. Branson and F. T. Atkins. (Applause.) For his own part he regretted very much that this matter had been made a party question, but the challenge was first thrown down at Willis's Rooms by a Liberal of the first rank, and after that it behoved them as Constitutionalists—(cheers)—to take up and refute those statements which were made on that occasion, because they all knew that the time had not come when the provisions of this measure could be carried out with advantage to India and to add to the security and welfare of that Empire. (Applause.) Mr. Bryce had stated at a Liberal meeting on this subject that it was the principle of the Liberal party to study the opinions of the natives in every country over which we had any authority. But he contended that the Liberal party ought not to claim a monopoly of that sort, because they remembered how in the case of the natives of South Africa and of Egypt, the Liberals had allowed them to "stew in their own juice." (Hear, hear.) This Bill, bad as it was, had had the effect of bringing the subject of India and the wants of that great Empire prominently before the minds of Englishmen. But if they gave to native Judges in India this control over Europeans, they took away from the latter the privilege which they had so highly prized for centuries—viz., of being tried by their own countrymen. It was said that it was only a small Bill, but he thought it was the thin end of the wedge, and that if they once passed this measure they did not know where they should end, and British prestige in India would be a thing of the past. (Hear, hear.) The Judges of India had expressed very strong disapproval of the Bill; and their opinions were embodied in a minute of the High Court of Calcutta. Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose had argued that the natives of India had as much right to be tried by their own countrymen as Englishmen; but that was a very dangerous doctrine to teach. The Imperial Government had always studied caste prejudices and the privileges of the natives; and he was told that under the native articles of a native soldier could only be tried by native officers, and he believed that the Government were not prepared to abolish that privilege. Were they, then to put Europeans upon a different footing than the natives? But that was what the Bill proposed, and it had already had a very bad effect in India. It had created a great deal of class feeling, which he feared would take long to efface. Lord Ripon had appealed to his legal administrators in the country for their opinion on the question, and they all knew that the answer was an overwhelming majority against the Bill. (Applause.) He hoped that a better spirit would prevail in the minds of the Government of India, and that they would withdraw the measure. The natives themselves had exhibited no enthusiasm about it, and as far as he was concerned he should join the opponents of the Bill, and do all he could with them to induce the Government to withdraw it. (Applause.) He would now ask Mr. Branson to address the meeting. (Cheers.)

Mr. J. H. A. BRANSON said: Never have I, since this unfortunate and most pernicious measure was first introduced to the public, been able to speak upon it without being constrained to express my very deep regret that Lord Ripon should have so badly advised himself, as for no reason, and, as it were, in sheer sport, to have proposed this measure—a measure which has compelled men to give utterance to painful truths which they would fain have kept to themselves—which, in the discussion it has provoked, has suggested to a people who were very thankful for the peace, the happiness, the prosperity they were enjoying under British rule the idea that they are oppressed and insulted, that for years the Indian Government have done them gross injustice, made invidious distinctions between them and the English to their disadvantage, and allowed a slur to be cast and a stigma to remain upon them; that they owe to the English no debt of gratitude, but have to exact from them compensation and reparation for years of injustice and cruel wrong done by past generations of Englishmen, who are stigmatised as tyrants, robbers, and cruel unjust oppressors. A measure which, coming at a time when old barriers were as far as possible between the educated Bengali and the Englishman being removed or at least made less impassable, when old sores were being healed, old memories of feud and enmity were being obliterated, has undone the good work of a generation, has embittered old antagonisms and created fresh ones, has, as I remarked at the beginning of this controversy, in the name of progress rudely thrust India back a quarter of a century, and left the Englishman and the educated Bengali further apart and more irreconcilably opposed to each other than they were in the days just succeeding the Mutiny. But I do not conceive that we have met together to-day only to express our regret at this most reckless and foolish policy. As I understand it, we are here assembled that we, in common with virtually the whole of the Anglo-Indian community, official and non-official, might express not only our regret at the step that has been taken, but our condemnation of any further persistence with the Bill, and an earnest hope that those in authority, seeing how great is the consensus of opinion, even in this country against this measure, and seeing the evils that its introduction has already produced, and the greater evils that the further persistence with the Bill must inevitably produce, may withdraw it, and give peace and goodwill a chance of re-establishing themselves. But, speaking as I am to an English audience, it has appeared to me that the first duty that lies upon me is to place before you the facts upon which we ask you to decide the merits of the case upon which we claim your verdict. I do this because, long though this controversy has raged, the relative positions of the parties to the controversy appear to be still for the most part misunderstood by the great body of the English people; and this state of ignorance is sedulously nurtured by those who know that their only hope of gaining any supporters will be blasted if the people who are appealed to form judgment upon the matter shall be sufficiently instructed to know the real bearings of the question upon which their opinion is sought. A remarkable instance of this was afforded the other day, when an intelligent and right-minded delegate very sensibly remarked that we, here at home, would greatly object to have the people of India set to domineer over us, a sentiment which appeared to commend itself to his brother delegates, as I have no doubt it does to any one of us here, and this, which is the very point we are contending for, was supposed to be decisive of the case not for, but against us. Under these circumstances I have thought that the best service I could render to the cause would be, now that I have an opportunity of addressing a large and influential audience, to put our case before you so as to show you exactly what the state of things was in India as to the trial of Europeans upon criminal charges, and what change it was proposed to effect by the Bill as it was introduced into the Council. And in the doing of this I have thought that I should carry most weight if instead of using my own language I endeavoured as much as possible to use the language of the distinguished and responsible officials, whose opinions are now before the public. Firstly, I may premise that until the year 1872 no European British subject could, save for some very petty offences, be tried by any judicial officer in any of the provincial districts or, as they are termed in India the Mofussil. This was found to be an evil, because, though, as Mr. Ilbert has himself said, charges against Europeans are rare, yet it was, no doubt, an evil, that for a comparatively trivial offence the expense and delay of sending the accused and all witnesses in the case to a High Court should have to be incurred. In 1872, therefore, after long and careful debate, it was enacted that, except in cases punishable with death or transportation for life, an accused European British subject might be tried by the magistrate or judge of the district where the offence was committed, provided that such magistrate or judge was himself a European British subject, and thus the question of administrative inconvenience was fully and satisfactorily answered. Since that date the European British subject is open to be tried for all but the worst of offences in the place where the offence is charged to have been committed. His only safeguard is this, that the judge who is to try him would be one of his own nation, one who would have some knowledge of the habits, the customs, the manners, the ways, of thought of the accused; one who could, in some degree, put himself into the place of the accused, and say, "would he have been likely to do this act?" The European British subjects who could thus try Europeans in the interior were, for the most part, members of the Indian Covenanted Civil Service; but of late years, in districts where non-official Europeans have settled, some of them have been selected to be honorary magistrates; and there is also a considerable sprinkling of uncovenanted European magistrates over the country, and all of these who were British subjects were competent to try the accused European. This system worked excellently well, and it is now admitted that there was no basis at all for the false cry that administrative inconvenience was produced by this state of things; and the present Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, in his speech in Council on March 9, 1882, expressed his conviction that "this measure is unnecessary in the present condition and constitution of the Native Judicial Covenanted Service in Bengal," and observed "that there were a great many facts which supported the contention that there is no administrative difficulty in connection with the matter"—an opinion which we all now know that he has emphatically and after careful investigation reiterated in his report to the Viceroy. Without, then, there being anything to justify any interference in tampering with the law as it then stood—and just one year after the Criminal Procedure Code of 1882 had been framed, which on this subject re-enacted the provisions of the Code of 1872—this Bill was brought before the Council and the public. The origin of this Bill is not quite easy to discover, but putting together various pieces of information which I have received from one quarter and another it would appear to be this. When the Criminal Procedure Code of 1882 was before the Council, a native member pointed out to a member of Lord Ripon's Government that an anomaly existed. He pointed to the fact that the native of India, not being a European British subject, in the Mofussil had no right to sue out a writ of habeas corpus before the High Court to question the justice of his detention in prison. This right an Englishman has, and the native member thought it was anomalous that this distinction should exist. This was a hard nut for the Viceroy to crack. The boon was one which it was out of the question that the Viceroy could grant. It was felt that in the circumstances under which we hold India this anomaly must continue. The Englishman is a loyal, peaceable, useful citizen. He may be trusted not to plot against the Government, and against him no power of summary imprisonment was necessary. But as against the native of India it was felt that the power which is vested in the Government of India, to seize and imprison him without answering for such detention to the High Court, could not be surrendered. But if this had been plainly and honourably stated, an opportunity would be afforded to the declaiming Baboos of Bengal to protest that there was no ground as there could be, and, in fact, is no ground, on the pretence that the native was as the European. So a clever expedient was devised—a division must be created. As in Ireland, an intelligent ruler, to whom it was proposed that there should be a remission of a particular duty, suggested that instead of passing an Act to that effect, he should gratify the deputation who waited upon him and wanted something done, by creating a new felony instead—so it would appear to have been suggested that as what was sought was the removal of an anomaly, one anomaly would be as good as another to convince the Bengali mind that Lord Ripon really regarded the native of India as on the same platform with the Englishman, and so it was proposed to the native, not by him, that the alteration contemplated by the proposed Bill should be made. But I have not done. It would seem to have been felt that it would be an unseemly thing that the Viceroy's Government should, of its own notion, propose such a change, or any change, in an Act which had just been passed after long and careful consideration, and at a moment when the author of that Act had just left his place in the Council, and when a stranger, new to India, was in his place. So it seems to have been considered wise that the request for the change should appear to come from a native; and in pursuance of this honest effort—for Lord Ripon's Government, if not honest, is nothing—it was suggested, as I have been credibly assured, to Mr. Gupta, a young Bengalee civilian, by a member of the Viceroy's Council that he should write the letter which affected to complain of the intense mental anguish it caused him not to be able to sit in judgment on the Englishmen, and this simulated anguish is what has been put before the British public as a spontaneous protest of the native civilian against a fancied wrong. This, then, is the device to which this Bill owes its origin. If it is, as I believe it to be in the main, true, I leave it to you to say what the character of the proceeding is. The effect of the Bill is stated by the Judges of the Calcutta High Court in that letter of theirs, which has been called the most statesmanlike production of this controversy, to be as follows:—

"Accordingly, if this Bill becomes law, the effect will be that (1) all Native sessions judges and magistrates of the district will, ex officio, exercise the same jurisdiction over European British subjects as is now exercised by European officials of the same class; and (2) the Government will be empowered to invest any Native magistrate of the first class, who is either a covenanted civilian, or has been appointed under 33 Vict. cap. 3, or is an assistant commissioner in a non-regulation province, or a cantonment magistrate, with the jurisdiction over European British subjects, which by the existing law is restricted to European British subjects. Thus a Native magistrate, who has been appointed to be a justice of the peace, will have jurisdiction (1) to inquire into any charge against a European British subject, and either commit him to the Sessions Court or High Court; or (2) if the offence be one ordinarily triable by a magistrate, to try it and impose a sentence of three months' imprisonment, or fine up to Rs. 1,000, or both. A Native sessions judge or assistant judge, empowered under Section 444, will be competent to try a European British subject for any offence not punishable with death or transportation for life, and to impose a sentence of one year's imprisonment or fine of unlimited amount, or both. Cases for which, in the sessions judge's opinion, such a punishment is inadequate, will be transferred to the High Court.

"It must be remembered that in India the powers of police investigation, magisterial inquiry, and judicial trial are closely connected, and are frequently combined in the same official. Under the Code of Criminal Procedure, as it now stands, any district or subdivisional magistrate, as well as any other magistrate specially empowered in that behalf (Section 191), may take cognisance of any offence, that is, initiate criminal proceedings in respect of any offence, (1) upon a complaint made, (2) upon a police report thereof, (3) upon information received from any person other than a police officer, or (4) upon his own knowledge or suspicion that such offence has been committed.

"It is the duty of the district or subdivisional magistrate to direct investigations by the police. He receives their daily reports, and very often has to instruct them on points which he may think that they have overlooked or mis-apprehended. It sometimes even happens that the investigation is taken out of the hands of the police and conducted by the magistrate himself (Section 159). The result of this is that the chief local magistrate practically becomes the prosecutor, and may become the judge, notwithstanding that he may have formed a strong opinion on the case behind the back of the accused without having heard his explanation or defence. This is the system in force in India; and although it is probably, for administrative reasons, unavoidable, it is an extremely dangerous system. It has certainly provoked adverse criticism; that it has not provoked more is probably due to the careful superintendence bestowed by district magistrates, who have in Bengal hitherto been English gentlemen of the Covenanted Civil Service, whose education and training have made them fully sensible of the responsibilities which such a system as that described imposes on them in their own proceedings, and also in supervising the proceedings of their subordinate sub-divisional magistrates. The present law protects European British subjects from the exercise of this dangerous combination of duties by any one but their own countrymen. The Bill under consideration proposes to remove this protection. It will become the duty, ex officio, of Native officers of a particular class to commit or try European prisoners, even in cases in which, in person or through the police, they have initiated investigations affecting them; and the Government will be empowered to select from a wide area such other Natives as it thinks well to invest with such powers.

"The position in which European British subjects would be placed by the proposed changes, is one which they have never yet occupied, and in which the Legislature has on several occasions deliberately determined that it would not be wise to place them."

Against legislation which was to produce such a result the Europeans of India rose in unanimous and determined protest. They had had no opportunity of expressing their opinions upon the Bill. It was to affect them, and them only. It was to interfere with no one's rights but theirs. Still, their opinion had never been sought. They were treated as if they were wholly unworthy of any thought or consideration from their rulers. Mr. Ilbert, in his speech introducing the Bill, sought to deprecate opposition by the statement that no one could look into the criminal statistics of India without being struck by the fact that trials of Europeans for criminal offences in India were "exceptionally rare." I suppose this was a way of saying to the Europeans, "so few of you will ever have to be tried that it matters not who tries you;" although, in truth, this is hardly consistent with the rest of the same sentence, in which he proceeds to state that the charges against Europeans are "exceptionally difficult to try." For this exceptional difficulty he vouchsafed no reason; but the reason would not have been far to seek had he desired to find or state it. It was that if charges against Europeans were exceptionally rare it was still more rare to find one true. But let me read you what the Judges say on this point:—

in the law was rested by the supporters of the Bill seem to the judges to call for observation. In the first place, as to the reasons adduced for the change. 'The only object we have in view,' it was observed by the honourable member who moved the introduction of the Bill, 'is to provide for the impartial and effectual administration of justice. It is by this test that we desire our proposals to be tried.' Tried by that test, the proposal seems to the judges indefensible, for no one has suggested that the present administration of justice is not effectual and impartial, or that it will become in any degree more impartial or more effectual by the proposed alteration. On the contrary, the proposal is that a class of cases, which are admitted to be of so 'exceptionally troublesome and difficult a character' as to justify their exclusion from the cognisance of any but specially qualified tribunals, shall be no longer confined to a class of officials who, in their disposal at present give entire satisfaction and command entire confidence, but shall become cognisable by officials, who, speaking generally, offer a less complete guarantee for impartiality and independence—who necessarily labour under the disadvantages arising from differences of nationality and social habits, and in whom the portion of the community concerned confessedly places less confidence than in the existing tribunals. If, as the honourable member says, the trial of Europeans is 'apt to put an exceptionally severe strain on the judicial qualities of fact, judgment, patience, and impartiality,' it is difficult to understand how the interests of justice can be promoted by committing these cases to officials who are regarded, and, the judges consider, rightly regarded, as less qualified to deal with them than those who at present are empowered to do so. Under the proposed law any Native Assistant Commissioner who has served long enough to become a first-class magistrate might, in Assam or in any other non-regulation province, be empowered to commit or try Europeans. Europeans may not unreasonably regard such an arrangement as providing less satisfactorily than the existing law for the impartial and effectual administration of justice in their own case. It is no disparagement of the integrity or ability of a Native judge to say that he is necessarily more amenable to the external influences to which popular feeling, local prejudice, or the wishes and interests of powerful individuals may give rise, than is a European officer, to whom such matters are for the most part unknown. It would be easy to conceive cases in which it would require no ordinary fortitude and independence on the part of a Native official to run counter to the prevailing sentiments of the society in which he lives. It not unfrequently happens that our superior officials are asked to transfer an important case from some Native judge or magistrate, not because from deficiency of experience or judicial knowledge he is unable to try it, but because one side or other apprehends (and sometimes even both sides unite in this respect) that some unknown or improper influence will be brought to bear on that officer."

You must not forget that this Bill, as I have pointed out to you, proposed to confer this jurisdiction upon, amongst other natives, those admitted by the Government of India by nomination, not after any test, not after any travel or residence abroad, but simply on the ground of their being related to families of wealth or distinction. Regarding them, let me read to you again from the judges' letter. They say:—

"With the statutory civilians there is absolutely no guarantee against the existence of the very defects which constitute the grounds of the reluctance of European British subjects to submit to their jurisdiction in criminal trials. They are described by the Judicial Commissioner of Oude in a document, forwarded by the Lieutenant Governor of the North Western Provinces with his own reply to the Government of India, as 'often being men saturated with caste and religious prejudice, and ignorant of European modes of thought and feeling.' One object of the statute was, the judges believe, to enable the Government to enrol in the ranks of its service Native gentlemen of high birth and social position. It is easy to imagine cases in which a gentleman might have on these grounds great claims to a nomination under the statute, who might yet be conspicuously deficient in many of the qualifications which are admittedly essential in the judge who is to deal with cases in which European British subjects are concerned. It must be remembered that it is with officials of this class, not with successful competitors in the Civil Service examination, that, in considering the present question, we have principally to deal; nor can the judges lose sight of the fact that these statutory civilians will be appointed by a system of nomination which was abandoned by the Government twenty-five years ago in favour of competitive examination, and which can scarcely be expected to work more satisfactorily in India than it did in England. On the officers thus nominated the proposed change will confer a jurisdiction unknown to English law, a combination of inquisitorial, magisterial, and judicial powers, which may be justified by the necessities of the case of India, but which Englishmen in India may with some reason contend should continue to be exercised in their own case, as it is at present, only by officials for whose competence or character they have some adequate guarantee."

Is it then matter of surprise that the Europeans in India should object to such a change? No one can for one moment say that this fear is groundless. What do the judges and Sir Stuart Bayley say on this:—

"The apprehensions which many Europeans entertain as to the results of the proposed change, are not, in the judges' opinion, without foundation. There is no doubt that the position of Europeans in the Mofussil has many disadvantages. They are often completely isolated, they live among people alien to themselves in religion, nationality, social habits, and political ideas. As owners of property and employers of labour they are necessarily brought into collision with classes or individuals whose interests conflict with their own; and it is impossible to ignore the fact that such a state of things exposes them to very considerable risks. The attention of the Government was forcibly drawn to this fact by the Hon. Sir Stuart Bayley in the debate of March 9. 'There is,' he said, 'another aspect to the case of the opposition which I think deserves most attentive consideration, and this is the real danger which the isolated European living in the Mofussil, runs from false cases trumped up against him. It is right that I should state publicly that this danger is a very real and very serious one, for probably no member of this Council has had the same experience, as I have, of the lives led by planters in the Mofussil. My own experience has given me a strong feeling on this matter, and anyone who knows the extreme bitterness with which disputes about land are fought out in the Mofussil, and the unscrupulous methods to which recourse is had in conducting these disputes before the Court—methods to which a planter cannot have recourse—will understand how precarious his position may become, and how essential to him it is that the law should be well and wisely administered.'

"The judges concur in the views here expressed; and they consider that the dangers thus described in the case of planters and manufacturers would be even greater in the case of persons in a humbler position in life, railway employees, artificers, and the like. These men are continually brought into contact with Natives in ways which may easily give rise to misunderstandings and ill-will. Should an accusation be brought against them, they labour under great disadvantages; they are often isolated from other Europeans; they generally have but an imperfect acquaintance with the vernacular languages; they are unable to retain the costly services of European advocates; and they might, in some circumstances, find it impossible to secure the assistance even of Native practitioners. It is easy to see how the grossest injustice might easily be inflicted in such cases by an officer who from any cause failed fully to realise the position of the accused. It is, at any rate, certain that Europeans of this class would feel an entire want of confidence in any but a European tribunal. On the whole, after making every allowance for temporary excitement and agitation, it is, the judges think, impossible to doubt that European residents in the Mofussil do really consider themselves to be, in an in fact are, in a position which justifies them in regarding the privilege of being tried by a European, on whose independence and impartiality they can fully rely, as one of very real importance to them.

"Accordingly, as the number of native officials who will be affected by the proposed change is extremely small; as it seems probable that the majority of native officials will for the future be statutory nominees, appointed in this country without any guarantee as to ability, and not necessarily possessing any acquaintance with the habits or feelings of Englishmen; as there is no evidence of any real demand for any such alteration; as the proposed change will disqualify a class of European officers who at present perform their duties to the entire satisfaction of the Government and the public; and as it cannot, it appears, be effected without a revival of animosities and class feelings, which are, on every account, to be deplored, the judges consider that nothing short of grave and pressing reasons could justify its introduction.

"But, so far as their own observation goes, the judges are unaware of the existence of any of the reasons on which a legislative change is usually demanded. In the exercise of their duties of superintendence and revision, they have occasion to watch attentively the working of the criminal courts, the returns of which are continually before them. Nothing in those returns indicates that there is at present any administrative inconvenience, any miscarriage of justice, any hardship inflicted on prosecutors, witnesses, or accused, or any dissatisfaction felt with the provisions of the code as to the jurisdiction of the Courts. Some provisions of the code are, the judges are aware, believed by some persons to operate severely, and any measure for the reform of these would deserve consideration. It might be well, for instance, to consider the possibility of extending to Natives in the Mofussil, under certain conditions, the right of the nature of a habeas corpus, now exclusively enjoyed by Europeans, of applying to the High Court in cases of unlawful detention. But as regards the powers conferred on the several classes of Courts and the rights enjoyed by European British subjects in criminal cases, the judges are not aware that there is any feeling of grievance or, except among a few individuals, any wish for change. On the contrary, the judges believe that the privileges now enjoyed by Europeans are readily acquiesced in by the main body of Natives, who understand and sympathise with the natural desire of Europeans to be tried by their own countrymen, and who appreciate the evils to which any alteration of the existing law may probably conduce."

Here then you have no vapouring, no rabid clamour. You have the responsible opinion of men whose duty it is to watch the administration of justice, who are every day dealing on appeal with the trials that take place in all the criminal courts in the country; they are no sentimental theorists; they do not spend their lives away from the people, but among them; and they hear every day from the native bar and the native pleaders practising in their courts their comments upon the administration of criminal justice by the native magistrates. This opinion of theirs is concurred in by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal. Let me give you but one instance of how a native magistrate can act. The case I am about to give you occurred not long before I left Calcutta, and was brought before the High Court as a court of revision by Mr. M. M. Ghose, the brother of the Mr. L. M. Ghose, who was, I am told, amongst you lately. A young native engineer in the service of the Government was ordered from one station to another. In order to make this journey he had to start by a steamer which left his station at daybreak. On the night preceding his departure a few young native friends entertained him at a dinner, served, it would appear, somewhat in European style. On his return home he undressed, being waited upon by his servant, and got to bed. He soon remembered that he had had his loose cash, chiefly in notes, in the breast pocket of his "jumper"; he got out of bed to look for it, but it was not there. Suspecting his servant of the theft, and fearing the result of delay, he went to the police station, next door to his own house, and charged his servant with the theft. The officer came over, search was made, and the missing roll of notes was found under the quilt of the bed, which had been pulled down. It had evidently fallen out of the pocket as the jumper was pulled off. The charge of course was dropped, and he thought no more of it till he awoke the next morning, when he found himself arrested by a warrant from the native magistrate of the station upon a charge of wilfully making a false charge against his servant. He was prevented from leaving the station; the steamer left without him. He was tried by the magistrate, convicted, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, and he was working out this sentence when the High Court, having been moved by Mr. M. M. Ghose, sent for the record of the case and quashed the conviction. The reason given by Mr. M. M. Ghose for this utterly unaccountable action on the part of the magistrate, was that the young engineer was one of the "young Bengal" party who had not followed the manner and customs of his ancestors, but lived more like a European, that the magistrate was one of the strict old orthodox school, and was, therefore, glad to have a fling at the young man and to take him down a little!

Permit me to give you just a further passage or two from the official reports. I shall select them from the opinions of Mr. Monro, the commissioner of the chief or presidency division of Bengal—one of the ablest men in the Bengal Civil Service—an officer whom I have heard the sturdy Rajpoot landowners of Behar speak of with the warmest admiration and reverence. He says, "Although every Hindoo would regard with horror any proposal to diminish the race distinctions of a Brahman, or remove the perpetual race disqualification of a Sudra, it is considered by all an unbecoming anomaly that Europeans should refuse to part with a privilege which they enjoy, as members of the dominant race, in favour of those who, amongst themselves, retain race distinctions with merciless severity." Again, he says, "it cannot be denied that natives generally are not so trustworthy as Europeans. This is most fully admitted by natives themselves, who, I have no hesitation in saying, prefer to have their cases tried by European officers. On the impartiality of European officers the great body of the people most thoroughly rely; they have not the same confidence in the unswerving fairness of their own countrymen. The reason for the existence of this state of feeling is not far to seek. The training of natives from their childhood, the enervating influence of the Zenana on their bringing up, early marriage, a low moral standard resulting from caste distinctions and the influence of centuries of subjugation, all tend to hinder the development in Bengalis of those manly and straightforward qualities which under other conditions are found in Englishmen. A Bengali's first idea of duty, as I have been told by one of themselves, is to please his superiors, not to satisfy his own conscience; and in any difficulty his moral weakness, not his moral strength, is conspicuous." Again—"It is further alleged that the particular danger to which Europeans in the Mofussil are exposed is the institution of false charges, and that this danger would be very materially increased were the power to try Europeans made over to native officers. On this point I entertain no doubt whatever, and it may be safely predicted that whatever might be the merits of a native magistrate entrusted with the power proposed to be conferred, the litigious enemies of any European in a district would feel encouraged to accuse him, in the hope that their efforts might be attended with more success than would probably result when such charges were tried by Europeans. This danger from false cases is a very real one." But I must cease to quote, and bring this long address, which I fear has already trespassed upon your time, to a close. To put before you all that the officials in India have said would take days not hours. You know the result of the appeal made by Lord Ripon to the great body of public servants, whom one of Lord Ripon's obsequious followers, in a burst of eloquence, described as "his eyes and ears." There is not one single European officer who has approved of the original Bill. The vast majority have condemned it entirely, and advised its prompt withdrawal. A few have, while expressing their regret at its introduction and their objection to its present form, suggested that it should be passed in some shape which will give it virtually no effect, but which at the same time will seem not to be a retreat. They seem to say "it is right to withdraw the Bill, but we fear to advise its withdrawal for political reasons." In this they differ from the body of their countrymen, who I have always thought entirely approved of the honest, manly tone of the words of our great poet, when he wrote:—

Much more might be said against the Bill now than has been said, but that it is felt that there are subjects on which it is well to be silent. The very powerful arguments attributed to the Commander-in-Chief of Bombay are of this class. They may be safely enough used here. He points out that for political reasons it would be impossible to let native soldiers sit upon courts-martial to try English officers or soldiers, and he warns the Government against giving a power to the timid people of Bengal, which they dare not give to the warlike races in our army. The policy which seeks to introduce this Bill will be looked upon as a policy of withdrawal from the country, a policy which Mr. Gladstone himself says that no one with any knowledge of the subject can for a moment approve of. I call upon you, therefore, to join in supporting the resolution that is before you, and as far as you can to urge upon the Government to withdraw this Bill, and so to put an end to the lamentable state of things now existing in India. I thank you for your patient hearing, as well on my own account as on behalf of those who look to you to help them in this their hour of need, their time of trial.

Mr. F. T. ATKINS, who was received with applause, said that although after the eloquent address they had just heard he felt that the remarks he had to make could not have much effect, yet he desired to say this, that their fellow-countrymen—those artisans, those mechanics those engine-drivers scattered all over India—would not have sent him to England if they had not considered that this Ilbert Bill was a great and grievous wrong. (Hear, hear.) They had in India nothing like Conservatives and Liberals, they had there no party feelings, but this Bill had been made the cause of one great party union, in which every Liberal and every Conservative joined and said, "We must not have it." (Hear, hear.) He was much surprised to see the changes he saw had taken place in this country during his twenty years' absence in India; but nothing surprised him more, and nothing pained him more, than to learn that there were sections who would deny the claims of justice; that there was a party in this country who would ever attempt to obstruct the liberty of appeal to public opinions. (Shame.) But he grieved to say that he found a statement in the Manchester Courier to the effect that, no matter what meeting was held to protest against this Bill, that party would obstruct it, that the opponents of the Bill were to be opposed, and that those who were championing the cause of their fellow-countrymen and women across the wide ocean were not to have a fair hearing given them. He rejoiced to see that such was not the case in that meeting. (Hear, hear.) When he was leaving India his fellow working-men said to him, "Go to our fellow working-men in England and tell them that we don't want to take away any privileges from the Mahomedans or Hindoos, that we do not want to take away anything that they enjoy, but that we do ask our fellow-men not to take those privileges which belong to us and belong to them." (Applause.) Surely that was a modest request and a reasonable desire, and any pre-determined opposition to it could only proceed from men whose feelings were not influenced by honour and judgment, and who were intoxicated with the feeling of their own omnipotence and infallibility. (Applause.) But he felt sure also that there were many in this country who opposed this Bill, who had no knowledge of India, or who gathered their knowledge of that great country from the educated natives who came over, and from the Government reports published from time to time. But let him tell them at once that there was not a native that had ever come to England that represented the great millions of that country. He would venture to say that there was not a Protestant congregation in this country who would desire to be represented in Church matters by a Roman Catholic, and there was not a Roman Catholic who would desire to be represented in Church matters by a Protestant. If that were so, they would readily understand that there was not a Brahmin in India who would be represented by a Sudra. Mr. Atkins proceeded to point out at length the grounds of the objection of Europeans in India, and especially of European working-men, to the Bill, and urged his hearers to oppose it with all their strength.

Other speakers also addressed the meeting.

MR. JAMES WILSON (OF THE "INDIAN DAILY NEWS") ON MR. ILBERT'S BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH."

SIR,—Much misconception prevails, and many misrepresentations have been made, as to the nature and objects of the Bill known by the above name. And as the working of the Bill, if it should be passed, might seriously endanger the liberties of Englishmen and Englishwomen in India, the latter strongly oppose the measure. A deputation has been sent from India with a view to inform public opinion in this country, and I have been asked as one knowing something of the subject to make the merits or demerits of the Bill known. With your permission I will avail myself of your extensive publicity, and will try to make the facts as plain as possible, and to correct some of the many misrepresentations that are being made on the subject.

What then, is the "Ilbert Bill?" The English Government send out to Calcutta from time to time a legal gentleman to be a member of the Legislative Council "for making laws and regulations." Some very eminent men have held this office, which is a well-paid one. Lord Macaulay held it, and to him India owes a most admirable penal code, which would be a good model for this country. There is also a code of "criminal procedure" which clearly defines the mode of procedure, the powers of the judges, magistrates, and other officers. Amongst other eminent men who have held the office have been Sir Henry Maine and Sir Fitzjames Stephen. The latter revised both the above codes, and on the revision of the latter in 1872 the subject of criminal jurisdiction over Europeans by native magistrates was considered, and it was not deemed advisable to give that jurisdiction. Here I may observe parenthetically that I shall have to make many references, without verifying the actual statements by reproducing the words. But I will not state any material fact without citing the authority for it. For the state of the law, and for not, in 1872, giving this jurisdiction to native magistrates or justices of the peace, I refer the reader to the paper by Sir J. Fitzjames Stephen in the October number of the Nineteenth Century of the present year. That statesman-like and philosophic, though somewhat blunt, exposition of the subject ought to outweigh the enormous quantity of, perhaps, well-meaning sentiment that has been exhibited on the subject. In 1872, after due consideration by so able a man as Sir Fitzjames Stephen, it was not deemed either wise, just, or expedient to deprive European British subjects of the right to be tried in criminal cases by their own countrymen. To deprive them of that right is the sole object of that Bill, and it derives its name from the present legal member of the Council, Mr. Ilbert, who has charge of the Bill. The idea of placing the judgment of Mr. Ilbert who had only been a few months in India when he took charge of the Bill, against that of Mr. Justice Stephen, who spent his full time in that office, is simply preposterous. It will tend to make the whole matter clearer if I briefly sketch the course of an Indian Bill. The Legislative Council consists of about half-a-dozen members of the Government, who are also the Council of the Viceroy. These constitute "the Viceroy in Council," and they are capable of transacting petty legislation up at Simla or elsewhere, where they retire for about eight months in the year, drawing enormous salaries which were fixed on the supposition of residence in the plains. But most of the important legislation is done in Calcutta, where the Legislative Council is enlarged by several non-official members, one or two practising barristers, one or two from the mercantile community, and perhaps one or two native gentlemen who may or may not understand the language spoken or the business before the Council. Further, to prevent any impetuous Viceroy entering upon any rash legislation, no Bill can be introduced into the Council without the consent of the Secretary of State for India being first obtained. Then it is published for "general information," and in due course is passed into an Act. This is a well-meant and most desirable course of procedure in principle; but in a party Government like ours, it is a distinct misfortune to India. The question too often turns upon the party in office, and the measures are made subservient to party interests in England, however disastrous to the interests of India. Take, for instance, the Vernacular Press Act. It was introduced under the administration of Lord Beaconsfield. It was alleged that the native Press was exceedingly disloyal and insulting to the powers that be. The Bill was passed at a sitting; a most unwise measure, as it made an invidious distinction between papers printed in the native languages and those in English. Any treasonable article could be published with impunity if printed in the English character, and several native journals changed their type, but not the spirit of their writings. The present Government when they came into office repealed the Act—more as a party measure than anything else. The Act should never have been introduced, as the penal code, which is well understood throughout the country, could easily have been made to deal with the case, and would not have raised the question of race distinction. In the case of the Ilbert Bill, Lord Ripon sent to the Secretary of State a copy of the proposed Bill, making certain representations—or, if I may say it without offence, for I do not wish or intend to be offensive—misrepresentations, asking for leave to introduce the Bill. On these statements, which seemed, in their partiality, reasonable enough, the Secretary of State gave permission for the Bill to be introduced. The next stage was the publication of the Bill in the Government Gazette. This was the first intimation the public had of the intended measure; and seeing that it directly tended to deprive them of what they deemed to be their rights, the present agitation arose. According to the opinion of those who have had most experience of India, the Bill is a mistake in policy, and it was denounced in language that cannot be altogether approved, and which, it is to be feared, has rendered the withdrawal of the Bill more difficult than it need have been. By sanctioning the Bill the Secretary of State practically commits himself to support the Viceroy in passing it. The violence of language used against it is represented as a threat; and, of course, the Viceroy could not, and ought not to, be deterred by a threat from any quarter, native or European. In that respect, the Secretary of State is bound to support the Viceroy. But it might be shown that Lord Ripon obtained the sanction of the Secretary of State under what may be termed—if as I say, it may be permitted me to say so—practically misrepresentation. This is a grave statement; but it will be dealt with hereafter. The Secretary of State may feel the difficulty of ordering the withdrawal of the Bill on that ground. It would inevitably lead to the resignation of Lord Ripon, the discredit of the Government, and to political difficulties which the Government prefer not to encounter. Consequently, the party is committed to it, and the order has gone forth that Lord Ripon is to be supported against the almost unanimous opinion of the English in India, whose rights, liberties, and property may be thus sacrificed to party. It is partly in the hope of inducing at least some of my countrymen not to lend themselves to an unworthy party use that I write on the subject. And, now, what is the Ilbert Bill? It is entitled "A Bill to Amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, so far as it relates to the exercise of jurisdiction over European British subjects."

It was hoped that the subject was finally settled in 1872 by Mr. Fitzjames Stephen, but it was considered again in 1882, and still it was not deemed either necessary or expedient to give this jurisdiction.

It is rather strange that it should have been thought desirable to bring up this delicate and irritating subject again within twelve months.

"Whereas it is expedient to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, so far as it relates to the exercise of European British subjects; it is hereby enacted as follows:—"

[Here follow the numbers of sections proposed to be altered, and the words to be omitted or inserted, which would be unintelligible in their disconnected form. But if anyone wishes to see the Bill I have a copy of it.]

Appended to every Bill introduced into the Legislative Council there must be a

"STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

"Shortly after the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act 10 of 1882, was passed, the question was raised, whether the provisions of that code which limit the jurisdiction over European British subjects outside the presidency towns to judicial officers who are themselves European British subjects should not be modified. [Anyone reading this would imagine that this point had arisen for the first time, whereas Sir Fitzjames Stephen thought it was finally settled in 1872; and clearly in 1882, when it was reconsidered, it was not deemed either necessary or expedient.] It was thought anomalous that, while natives of India were admitted to the Covenanted Civil Service and held competent to discharge the highest judicial duties, they should be deemed incompetent to be justices of the peace [which office alone would give them authority for that purpose] and to exercise jurisdiction over European British subjects outside the presidency towns.

"2. After consulting the Local Governments [please bear this phrase in mind, as much will depend upon it], the Government of India has arrived at the conclusion that the time has come for modifying the existing law and removing the present bar upon the investment of natives magistrates in the interior with powers over European British subjects in such a way as to remove from the code at once, and completely, every judicial disqualification which is based on merely race distinctions.

"With this object the present Bill has been prepared. . . . [Here the proposed changes are again recited.]

(Signed) "C. P. ILBERT.

"The 30th January, 1883."

Such is the Ilbert Bill; and as there are several phases of the agitation in connection therewith that require exposition, I trust you will afford me the opportunity of placing them before the public, that they may form their own opinion on the subject.

THE SAME.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH."

SIR,—It would be a distinct advantage to the cause I advocate if the reader will preserve each letter for a few days for reference. In the last letter I gave the Bill, with the statement of objects and reasons for its introduction. If, in accordance with the above suggestion, the reader will refer to the above document, he will find only one reason alleged for the introduction of the Bill. It was "thought anomalous that while natives were admitted to the Covenanted Civil Service, they should be held incompetent to exercise jurisdiction over British subjects outside the Presidency towns." It was soon thought "anomalous" that such a Bill should be introduced, especially on such a pretence, and the argumentum ad anomaliam was much too weak to hold water. It was pointed out that if Lord Ripon's mission was to remove the anomalies, he had undertaken a task that might well appal a much stronger man. It is an anomaly that we hold India at all. It is an anomaly that a mere handful of Europeans should hold in subjection those whom some people are so fond of describing as the "teeming millions of India." It does not follow that subjection is oppression in the sense of abuse or ill-treatment, as some people represent. I can give many illustrations of anomalies which I commend to the serious consideration of Lord Ripon, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Bright, Mr. Chamberlain, and others, who as a party are resolved to do this great wrong to their countrymen in India, and, I will add, to India herself. The Viceroy is himself an anomaly. India is probably the poorest country in the world, and certainly the easiest to govern. It is miserably poor, and yet an English Government could think and decree that every man who was supposed to have an income of about £10 per annum should be subject to the income-tax! That anomaly, however, has been removed. It is an anomaly that the Viceroy, who is little more than an agent of the Secretary of State, should have the highest salary on earth, and that, too, paid by the poorest country. It is an anomaly that the Viceroy of the poorest country should have a salary five times that of the Prime Minister of the richest country in the world, five times that of the Secretary of State who controls every important act of his office, and two and a-half times that of the President of the United States, which is said by some authorities to be even richer than England! Surely, if anomalies are to be removed, here is a good one to begin with, rather than with a miserable Bill which Lord Ripon himself stated (the Council meeting, March 9, 1883) "would, if it were passed to-day, confer jurisdiction upon only two persons in India, and the number who would rise to that position during the next few years would not exceed four or five in number." I respectfully commend the above facts to the consideration of men of all parties, and especially to those who make so much pretence as to the welfare of the "teeming millions of India." Then for another anomaly, Lord Ripon—and in this matter one would like to hear the potent voice of Mr. Bright—might very well turn his attention to the Established Church in India. I mean the Church there "by law established." If we had entered upon a religious campaign with the intention to propagate Christianity amongst "the heathen," it might not be difficult to understand the position. But as it is, we have no national mission to the heathen; but we impose upon the country an enormous and costly establishment; and these worthy men are not ashamed to draw their high salaries from the pice of the Hindu and the Mohammedan, to whom they never minister, but who have to maintain their own creeds and ours out of miserable pinching from their taxed salt. I might fill all the space you might be disposed to give me with pointing out anomalies. Very recently a report has been made on the condition of the cattle in certain parts of India, and it is found that for want of salt the cattle are subject to disease, and deteriorate in their very nature. Yet salt is enormously taxed to pay Lord Ripon and others enormous salaries, a High Church establishment which never ministers to the people, and to such officers as Mr. Ilbert, who has been a whole year in India; and the effect of this magnificent measure of relief and justice is at the utmost, according to Lord Ripon himself, to invest two persons in India with criminal jurisdiction over Europeans. Truly this is a splendid result of our beneficent Government, whose special and highly paid mission it is to do justice to the "teeming millions of India," and to protect them from the domination and ascendancy of our own countrymen! It will be distinctly noticed that the only ground alleged in the statement of objects and reasons for the Bill was that the present state of things was felt to be anomalous. These other really great and scandalous anomalies are not to be touched, but the splendid and comprehensive achievement of bestowing criminal jurisdiction at present on two persons, and ultimately to a few more, is sufficient to throw the country into a state of convulsion which has not been equalled since the Mutiny. The argument and the position were felt to be so "anomalous" that the anomaly reason has been all but dropped. It would have been dropped entirely, but that to do so would have left the Bill without any reason at all, and would have required its withdrawal for lack of a raison d'être. It has therefore been deemed expedient to bolster up the Bill by supplementary objects and reasons that are as false as the original one. It is said that considerable inconvenience has been felt in the administration of the law, owing to the want of this jurisdiction. If this were correct it would be a proper thing to endeavour to remove the inconvenience as well as the anomaly if it could be done without creating still greater evils. The argument as to inconvenience must rest, if it has any basis at all, upon facts, and it is needful to examine them. In giving the statement of objects and reasons printed in my last letter, I desired particular attention to the opening sentence. It is said, "After consulting the local governments, the Government of India has arrived at the conclusion" that the law should be altered. Now, the above phrase would ordinarily be understood to mean that Lord Ripon had consulted all the local governments. But this was not so. He consulted Mr. Grant Duff, Governor of Madras, who had arrived in India not six months previously, and who was therefore a very competent adviser; Sir James Fergusson, Governor of Bombay, who had been exactly two years in India; but he did not consult Mr. Rivers Thompson, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, who joined the Civil Service in 1850, and may therefore be said to have had over thirty years of Indian experience, and to be at least as good an adviser as Mr. Grant Duff or Sir James Fergusson. Moreover, there is not in the service, nor on the viceregal throne, a more earnest and conscientious man than Mr. Thompson, and none with a wider practical experience amongst the people of India, or one better disposed to promote the real interest of the "teeming millions." Why was he not consulted? If anyone should have been consulted it should have been Mr. Thompson, not only for his wide experience and knowledge of the country, but because he is at the head of that local government which contains more European British subjects than the whole of the other local governments put together! Indeed I am not sure whether Bengal does not contain something near three-fourths of the European population of India; and yet the distinguished official who is charged with the administration of this province was not consulted at all! Nay, he was rather kept in the dark on the subject, which fact leaves the matter open to inferences which one would prefer not to draw. Mr. Thompson is in no need of praise from me; and those who live under his administration may give their testimony. On a recent tour in the Mofussil (the country as distinct from the Presidency towns) he was addressed thus:—"The people of these provinces joyfully welcomed you to your present exalted position as their ruler, on what may almost be termed a life-long acquaintance with your honour, in the course of which they have had ample opportunities of admiring your sterling qualities, your rigid conscientiousness, your unswerving justice, your kindly sympathies for the people, and your desire to elevate and improve their condition." Clearly, Mr. Thompson is not one of those men whose aggressiveness Mr. Gladstone, in an unwise moment and petulant mood, declared must be checked. The people of the province "would not trespass further upon him except to express a hope that the present unhappy differences between the races may be removed in such a way as to secure the just rights of both." In replying, Mr. Thompson said:—"He deplored, no one could do so more, for it affected him very much, those differences between Europeans and natives which had found such severe expression during the past few months. It was difficult to say whether Europeans or natives had begun them, but they were begun, and they found strong expression, especially in Bengal. He would be glad if the cause of these animosities were removed. They seemed to him to be based on a very small matter. After all, the Bill to give natives criminal jurisdiction over Europeans, which had given rise to these differences, was such a petty and small affair, that if it were passed it would confer the privilege on only two natives in India. Whereas, on the other side, it offended the susceptibilities, and he was inclined to think the just susceptibilities, of a very large class. Whichever way it was settled, he would be very glad if this cause of dispute were removed. He would be very glad of it, because he thought it turned away their attention from the development of those great reforms to which the Government of India, and also the Government of Bengal, attached very great importance." Few, we apprehend, will take exception to the spirit of these remarks on either side. But with such a spirit prevailing, surely some one is responsible for stirring up such race animosity as is now witnessed. It will be seen that Mr. Thompson's character for judgment, kindness to natives, interest in their welfare, honesty of purpose, and truthfulness of speech is unimpeachable. And on this supplementary bolstering up of the anomalous argument by the allegation that administrative inconvenience has resulted from the want of criminal jurisdiction over European subjects by native officers, Mr. Thompson has never experienced such a thing. He has lived in the province for a quarter of a century, is at the head of the administration in the largest province in India, and exercises authority over three-fourths of the civil population. Under him are all the administrative officers of the province. Mr. Monro, who is, I think, at present Commissioner of the Presidency Division, says on this subject:—"That there is at present no administrative necessity for the introduction of the measure, in these provinces at least, we have the assurance of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal; and it is superfluous for me to add my testimony to his as to no inconvenience having, as a matter of practice, been experienced from the existing constitution of the judicial administration. Nor do I see any reason to anticipate in the future that such executive difficulty will arise for many years as cannot be met without a change in the law of the land and in the fundamental principles of our administration. Such a remote difficulty, I think, may be dealt with in the spirit of those remarks made on another occasion by the mover of the Bill himself. 'Sufficient for the statesman if he can grapple with the problem of the day; for the distant future he must leave posterity to provide.'"

This does not exhaust the change of front that has taken place over this miserable Bill, and, with your permission, I will resume the subject, giving in all cases the authority for material facts or for opinions that deserve respect.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TWO PATRIOTS ON INDIA.

MAJOR EVANS BELL has gone to the United States, so we learn from the Daily News, on a lecturing tour. This distinguished member of the new "Indian Reform Association" may be relied on to tell our American cousins all about the mis-government of India by his abandoned countrymen; and doubtless it will not be the gallant Major's fault if an American crusade against English iniquities in Asia be not forthwith set on foot. Major Bell—so it appears from the Daily News—takes his credentials with him, in the shape of a letter from Mr. Bright, which ought to bring a blush to the cheek of every Anglo-Indian oppressor. This is what Mr. Bright says of us:—

"One Ash, Rochdale, August 25, 1883.—Dear Major Bell,—I am always glad to hear that Englishmen are going to the States and that Americans are coming here. The more we know of each other the better for both. I doubt if India is a subject which Americans will find or think very interesting; but if you can make it so they will learn something on a great question, which, as it concerns 250 millions of the world's population, must now and in future for an intelligent people, like our American brethren, have a great and growing interest. You are supposed to judge somewhat harshly of our Indian Government. In describing its course I do not doubt you will give it credit where credit is due, and that you will point out how much the people of England are disposed, as far as they are concerned, to govern wisely the vast population conquered by their fathers. The task of the wise government of so vast an Empire may be an impossible one—I often fear it is so; we may fail in our efforts, but whether we fail or succeed, let us do our best to compensate for the wrongs of the past and the present by conferring on the Indian people whatever good it is in our power to give them. Perhaps when the United States are wise enough to abolish what they call Protection—that is, protection of a class or classes at the expense of the nation—they may find a market in India, from which now their costly system shuts them out. I hope you may have a pleasant voyage out and home, and that your excursion to the States may be in every way satisfactory to you.—I am, very truly yours, (signed) JOHN BRIGHT."

It will be a consolation to Anglo-Indians to perceive that the great Patriot writes more in sorrow than in anger; and that he hints at a faint hope that we, wicked English, may, some day or other, do our best to compensate for the wrongs of the past and the present. Mr Bright is happy to feel confident that Major Bell "will give it (the Indian Government) credit where credit is due"—though the ground on which he bases his confidence does not strike one as a particularly hopeful one, "You (Major Bell) are supposed to judge somewhat harshly of our Indian Government."

MR. GLADSTONE'S LIBELS ON ANGLO-INDIANS CONDEMNED BY THE HIGHEST NATIVE TESTIMONY.

We have already noticed, more than once, the just indignation that Mr. Gladstone's sneers have aroused in the community so shamelessly slandered by the Prime Minister. It is with a great deal of pleasure that we find the leader of the Native press in India—the ablest supporter of the Ilbert Bill, and a staunch adherent of Lord Ripon's general policy—coming forward to condemn these wicked libels as simple untruths. Every Indian journalist of any standing is, of course, well acquainted with the facts of the case; and knows that Mr. Gladstone, when he accuses Anglo-Indians generally of the hateful things which he lays to their charge, is prostituting his great talents, and his hold on the popular imagination in England, to the most disgraceful party-spirit. Still, at the present moment, when to speak good of any Englishman is to be accounted no friend of Lord Ripon's, it argues both magnanimity and courage in an Indian journalist, when he boldly and honestly comes forward to speak the simple truth about his much-maligned English fellow-subjects. This is what the Hindu Patriot says of Mr. Gladstone's "ascendency" speech:—

"We cannot sufficiently thank Mr. Gladstone for his firm adherence to the principle of the Bill. We confess we do not take such an uncharitable view of the non-official or resident Europeans in India as he does. Whatever was the feeling among them at the time of the Mutiny or immediately after, that feeling had until the present agitation materially changed. They had identified themselves with the children of the soil, and were going hand-in-hand in the advocacy of necessary and wholesome reforms. They backed the natives in advocating reduction of expenditure, reduction of taxation and the reform of the financial and administrative machinery of the State. If the police oppressed, they were loud in denouncing it. If the executive officers were high-handed, they were not slow in condemning them. It is only in connection with the Ilbert Bill they have, as we hold, diverged from the right path; we have ventured to tell them from the beginning that they have been egregiously mistaken, but they have their own sentiments and wishes, and they are as much entitled to cherish them as we consider ourselves entitled to cherish ours. We, therefore, think that Mr. Gladstone would have done well if he had put the necessity of passing the Bill on the broad ground [of even-handed justice, instead of that of checking the race-ascendency of the resident Europeans in India."

THE ZEMINDARS AND THE PERMANENT SETTLEMENT.

AN important point in Mr. Ilbert's defence of the iniquitous Bengal Tenancy Bill, is that wherein he impugns the position of the Zemindars at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and throws doubt on the extent of the rights conferred upon them under that Settlement. We confess that this seems to us the most regrettable part of the whole business. We are not inclined to dispute the inherent right of Government to legislate—even to the extent of confiscation—for what it may consider to be "the protection and welfare" of its subjects. If Lord Ripon's Government has made up its mind to abrogate the Permanent Settlement, either with or without compensation to those who now benefit under that Settlement, the decision should be plainly stated, and the justification for it (if any there be) distinctly shown. But the Statement of Objects and Reasons seems to us to exhibit, on this point, a curious struggle between greed and timidity. It professes not to infringe the Permanent Settlement, and yet at the same time endeavours to show that the Permanent Settlement was, after all, only a solemn sham, and that in reality it neither conferred nor confirmed any of those proprietary rights which the Statesmen and Judges of the last ninety years have erroneously supposed to have been assured by it to the Zemindars.

It is universally admitted that the Permanent Settlement was at first exceedingly favourable to the Government, and exceedingly hard on the Zemindars; indeed, it is not denied that very nearly every great family in Bengal was ruined by it, and that the bulk of the land changed hands under its early operation. It seems, therefore, obvious that the Government ought to make out a very strong case indeed against it before tampering with its provisions, now that at last the advantage has gone round to the side of the Zemindars from that of the Government. Not that it is to be supposed that, even now, the revenue does not gain from the general prosperity—the freedom from Deccan Ryots Relief Acts and the like—that has resulted from it. On the contrary, we imagine no one could read the famous despatch of the Duke of Argyll on the Road Cess, without feeling convinced that the Government must sooner or later extend, rather than contract, the limits of the Bengal land revenue system.

But what is the view of that system that is taken by Mr. Ilbert and the Government of India?—and wherein does it differ from that which has hitherto been taken, not only by the Zemindars themselves, but also, as the Chief Justice of Bengal well points out, by all “the legislators, judges, and statesmen who, from time to time, have expounded and enunciated the law since the days of the Permanent Settlement?” A, a Zemindar, has the privilege, under that settlement, of paying to Government annually a certain amount of revenue, ( $x$ ), in respect of certain property in land, ( $p$ ), of which the Permanent Settlement Regulations over and over again call him the “proprietor.” Thus, the fourth Section of Regulation I of 1793 is as follows:—

“The Governor General in Council declares to the zemindars, independent talukdars, and other actual proprietors of land, that no alteration will be made in the assessment which they have respectively engaged to pay, but that they and their heirs and lawful successors will be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever.”

And Section 7, Clause 2, of the same Regulation, is as follows:—

“The Governor General trusts that the proprietors of land, sensible of the benefits conferred upon them by the public assessment being fixed for ever, will exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands under the certainty that they will enjoy exclusively the fruit of their own good management and industry. To discharge the revenue at the stipulated periods without delay or evasion, and to conduct themselves with good faith and moderation towards their dependent talukdars and ryots, are duties at all times indispensably required from the proprietors of land, and a strict observance of these duties is now more than ever incumbent upon them, in return for the benefits which they will themselves derive from the orders now issued.”

And again, Section I of Regulation II. of 1793 says:—

“Government must divest itself of the power of infringing

in its executive capacity the rights and privileges which, as exercising the legislative authority, it has conferred on the landholders. No power will then exist in the country by which the rights vested in the landholders by the Regulation can be infringed, or the value of landed property affected.”

Now Mr. Ilbert virtually tells us, in his speech in Council, that we have all along been using the term “proprietor” in a sense that it ought never to have been used in; and he declares that it means, not “proprietor” at all, as some people vainly think, but “the person whom for purposes of land revenue, and for this purpose only, the Government find it convenient and advisable to treat as owner or proprietor of the land!” Beautiful! And Mr. Ilbert goes on:—

“Such a recognition, of course, is not inconsistent, and was never supposed to be inconsistent, with the existence of any number of other rights in any number of other persons. All such rights are simply left outstanding. The use of the terms proprietor in this sense is closely analogous to the use of similar terms in English statute-law. Here, for instance, is a definition of owner taken from a recent English Act, the Public Health Act of 1875:—“Owner means the person for the time being receiving the rack-rent of the lands or premises in connection with which the word is used, whether on his account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would so receive the same if such lands or premises were let at a rack-rent.”

And, of course, after whittling down the “proprietorship” of the unfortunate Bengal Zemindar to such extremely shadowy proportions as this, Mr. Ilbert finds no difficulty in banging about the Permanent Settlement in such a way, that the reader begins to wonder why so much fuss has been made about a covenant so impotent and meaningless. He admits indeed that the Zemindar  $A$  is “the person who, whatever may be his rights on the soil, has the right of having a settlement made with him” (sic)—that is,  $A$  has the “right” to pay  $x$  rupees annually to the Government! And Mr. Ilbert does not, apparently, see his way at present to any direct increase of the payment  $x$  in respect of the landed property,  $p$ . But no difficulty is insoluble, to the ingenuity that reads in the word “proprietorship” a right to pay; and so Mr. Ilbert promptly discovers that, though Government can only take  $x$  rupees annually from  $A$  in respect of  $p$ , it can take away a part of  $p$  from  $A$ , give it to  $B$ , and then merrily tax  $B$ , while  $A$  still retains his “right” to be taxed to the full extent of  $x$ !

The ingenuity here displayed is a fitting sequel of that which, twelve years ago, discovered that, though the Permanent Settlement prohibited the imposition of new taxes on the land, it did not prohibit the imposition of cesses, such as a road cess and a public works cess! And it may be worth while here to quote two or three of the recorded opinions of members of the Indian Council on that former very questionable proceeding:—

Sir Erskine Perry said: “The language and acts of Lord Cornwallis and the Government of the day were so distinct, solemn, and unambiguous, that it would be a direct violation of British faith to impose special taxes in the manner proposed.”

Sir Frederick Halliday said: “To affirm that the right to impose these taxes, in the face of the promises of the Permanent Settlement, had already been ruled and decided in the case of the income tax, inasmuch as to say that, because in 1860 a general tax was temporarily imposed affecting all classes, therefore a special tax may now be permanently levied on one class only, although that class has been solemnly assured that no new tax and arbitrary extraction shall ever be laid upon it.”

Mr. H. T. Prinsep said: “The policy inaugurated and the measure sanctioned, will shake the confidence hitherto felt in the honesty and good faith of the Government.”

Mr. R. D. Mangles said: “We have no standing-ground in India except brute force if we forfeit our character for truth.”

Sir Frederick Currie said: “The plea that these territorial obligations cannot be met by the Imperial revenue, is a cogent reason for retrenchment and economy; but it cannot justify our laying a special tax on the zemindars of Bengal, to do which would be a breach of faith and the violation of the statutory engagement made at the Permanent Settlement."

Mr. Albert's delicate refinements about the exact force of the term "proprietor" have naturally been improved upon by his zealous supporters; until at last we find, in the Contemporary Review article, to which we have already referred, the very broad and honest statement:—

"The zemindars were not originally proprietors or landlords; and, it may be shown beyond contradiction that they were not made so by the Permanent Settlement in the sense of absolute owners of the soil."

And other writers—doubtless misled by the fact that during the periods when the revenues of Bengal were farmed, the great landholders were properly and wisely chosen for the office of revenue farmer—have grown to speak of the ancient position of the Zemindar as if it had been historically recognised as that of a publican or taxgatherer. Now, apart from any possible quibbling about the words "absolute owners," a very few sentences from the dicta of the highest possible contemporaneous authorities will be sufficient to expose the hollowness of all this verbal trickery. Seventeen years before the date of the Permanent Settlement, Mr. Francis, afterwards Sir Philip Francis, wrote in 1776:—

"The inheritable quality of the lands is alone sufficient to prove that they are the property of the zemindars, taluqdars, and others, to whom they have descended by a long course of inheritance. The right of the Sovereign is founded on conquest, by which he succeeds only to the State of the conquered Prince; unless, in the first instance, he resolves to appropriate and transfer all private property, by an act of power, in virtue of his conquest. So barbarous an idea is equally inconsistent with the manners and policy of the British nation. When the Moguls conquered Bengal, there is no mention, in any historical account, that they dispossessed the zemindars of this land, though it is frequently observed that where they voluntarily came in and submitted to the new Government, they were received with marks of honour, and that means were used to gain and secure their attachment."

This was what was understood by "proprietorship" in the time of Warren Hastings, before the English language had arrived at that perfection of subtilty which we observe in Mr. Albert's speech. We can hardly feel surprised if the Maharajahs of Behar, in the very clear and straightforward exposition of their case which they have sent to England to be presented to Parliament, indignantly brush aside all these petty quibbles in the following manly words:—

"It is not the intention of your Petitioners to enter into a long and profitless discussion, as to the original status of the zemindars of the country. When the British Government assumed the direct administration of Bengal and Behar in 1772, they at any rate found the zemindars in possession of large estates and exercising the ordinary rights of proprietors. Some of the Rajahs of Behar date their origin from times anterior to the conquest of Bengal by the Mahomedans, while others have received proprietary grants and titles of honour from the Emperor Akbar, who was a contemporary of Queen Elizabeth. During the long period of Mahomedan domination, their right as proprietors were never questioned, and the fact that in Behar the land is mainly held by Hindoo proprietors shows how little the Mahomedans interfered with the vested rights of the people. Nor did the British Government, on succeeding to the administration of the country, make any change in the system or policy of their Mahomedan predecessors. The system was this:—The Government claimed, as the ruling power, a certain proportion of the produce of every beegha of land in the country. This proportion, whether paid in kind or estimated in money, was collected by the zemindars from the cultivators. It was the duty of the zemindar to pay into the treasury the amount assessed on his zemindary as the Government share of the produce: but subject to the payment of this amount, he exercised full proprietary rights over his tenantry. All that he collected from the ryots over and above the Government assessment was his own. The charge of the police and the administration of justice were in his hands, and there were no local tribunals to which the ryots could appeal for redress, if they desired to question the justice of his demands."

Now we will give the opinion of Mr. Shore (afterwards Lord Teignmouth) at the time of the arrangement of the Permanent Settlement, which was so largely his work, though he disapproved of many of its details:—

"I consider the zemindars as the proprietors of the soil, to the property of which they succeed by the right of inheritance, according to the laws of their own religion; and that the sovereign authority cannot justly exercise the power of depriving them of the succession, nor of altering it when there are any legal heirs. The privilege of disposing of the land by sale or mortgage is derived from this fundamental right, and was exercised by the zemindars before we acquired the Diwani."

Next, we will give an extract from the minute of Lord Cornwallis himself, dated the 18th September, 1789. He says:—

"Mr. Shore has most ably, and, in my opinion, most successfully, in his minute delivered in June last, argued in favour of the rights of zemindars to the property of the soil. But, if the value of permanency is to be withdrawn from the settlement now in agitation, of what avail will the power of his arguments be to the zemindars for whose rights he has contended?"

Again, his Lordship writes:—

"I am not only of opinion that the zemindars have the best right, but from being persuaded that nothing could be so ruinous to the public interest as that the land should be retained the property of Government, I am also convinced that, failing the claim of right of the zemindars, it would be necessary for the public good to grant a right of property in the soil to them, or to persons of other descriptions. I think it unnecessary to enter into any discussion of the grounds upon which their right appears to be founded."

On WEDNESDAY, Oct. 31, at 3 p.m.,

WHEN A PAPER WILL BE READ BY

ROPER LETHBRIDGE, Esq., C.I.E.,

ON

"THE MISCHIEF THREATENED BY THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL."

Tickets can be obtained on application to the Secretary of the Association, 26, Charing-cross, S.W.

"That ungodly measure of wholesale robbery, The Bengal Tenancy Bill. . . . A measure which threatens to

leading Native Paper of Bengal).

"In the present instance, it is one party to the contract which proposes, of its own motion, and by the abuse of a plenary power, to override one of its most important provisions, in a way which must not only most seriously affect the pecuniary interests of the other party, but work a complete revolution in their status."—ENGLISHMAN (the leading English Paper of Bengal).

"The effect of the Bill is simply to deprive the zemindars of their proprietary rights, and to render them mere ciphers upon their estates."—Petition of Behar Landholders to Parliament.

"The Bengal Tenancy Bill, the manifest tendency of which seems to be to revolutionise the present relations between landlord and tenant in the provinces of Bengal and Behar, to redistribute landed property on a new and inequitable basis, and to fetter the freedom of action of all classes interested in agriculture by driving them at almost every step of their mutual transactions to Courts of Law and fiscal officers, and to foster dispute, litigation, and animosities in lieu of peace, harmony, and good-will among them."—Petition of Bengal Landholders to Parlia-

"I confess I view with horror and dismay the revolutionary provisions of the present Bill."—Minute of the Chief Justice of Bengal.

"Our rights, our social position, nay, our very means of living, are at stake."—Speech of the Hon. Maharajah Sir Jotendro Mohan Tagore, K.C.S.I. (late Member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council).

Author of the "Indian Muse in English Garb." "Pleasures of Morality," "Wilson-Virah," &c. Editor of the "Indian Spectator," Bombay.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

"A quaint and undoubtedly clever book from the pen of a native of India. The volume consists of a series of short sketches of scenes and people in Gujarat, which may be regarded as typical of classes of the community, their ways of life and modes of thought. Mr. Malabari's English style is remarkably good, and seldom exhibits any want of ease.

His book is of special interest as throwing some light on the real feeling of the natives with regard to their British rulers."—Daily Telegraph.

"The book is clever throughout."—Academy.

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 200 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE OPINIONS OF SEVERAL BENGAL DISTRICT OFFICERS ON THE ILBERT BILL.

OPINIONS OF BENGAL DISTRICT OFFICERS ON THE BILL.

Nos. 1518-19J., dated 27th March, 1883.

From—F. B. PEACOCK, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Judicial, Political, and Appointment Departments.

To—All Commissioners of Divisions, the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs.

I am directed to forward herewith a copy of a Bill (with Statement of Objects and Reasons) to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, so far as it relates to the exercise of jurisdiction over European British subjects, and to request that you will be good enough [after consultation with selected officers, European and Native, in your division] to favour the Lieutenant-Governor with an expression of your opinion upon the principle of the Bill, and as to the question whether any administrative inconvenience at present arises, or is likely to arise in the future, from the exclusion of native covenanted civilians from the power of trying European British subjects on criminal charges.

2. Your reply to this letter should be despatched so as to reach this office at Darjeeling by May 15 at the latest.

No. 34, dated April 10, 1883.

From—T. T. ALLEN, Esq., Officiating Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs.

To—The Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Judicial, Political, and Appointment Departments.

In reply to your No. 1519J. of the 27th ultimo, I have the honour to say that, in my opinion, the proposed Amendment Bill is philosophically and logically vicious in principle, politically inexpedient, and practically impossible, should the Europeans refuse to acquiesce.

2. I apprehend that, after what has been said elsewhere, no lengthened arguments are expected in support of my opinion, and I will content myself with merely referring to the remarks of Mr. F. Stephen in 1872, and the speeches of Messrs. Thomas and Evans, with whose reasonings I entirely agree.

3. If the Bill were passed to-morrow, there are many ways by which Europeans in the mofussil could frustrate and render impossible the exercise of the jurisdiction, and I quite anticipate that any district in which such a jurisdiction were forcibly introduced would very soon be thrown into disorder and confusion, while the Baboo civilian might be artfully driven into such blunders and misconduct as would necessarily involve his official disgrace. The elements of disorder exist in every district; they are not dead, but sleeping: A very little stimulus and organisation would let them loose with formidable force.

4. It has been taken for granted all through that the administration of justice by Native Magistrates in Calcutta is satisfactory, because, I suppose, complaints are not made against it. Now, the absence of complaints is sufficiently explained by the class of Europeans who generally appear as defendants in these courts. Without having given any special attention to the subject, I have read from time to time the newspaper report of proceedings where cases of a more important character were under trial, and the opinion I entertain is that, should any competent person consistently and steadily watch these Police Courts of Calcutta, his conclusion would be that the administration of justice in them is very far from satisfactory, and that nothing but the obscurity and poverty of the vast majority of the defendants prevents a great deal more from being heard of their proceedings.

5. As to any administrative necessity for this amendment, I know of none such at present, and I see no prospect of any such in the near future. A District Magistrate is the one Magistrate in the district who does not need to be vested with special judicial powers, having practically ceased to be a judicial officer. A reference to the High Court's Annual Report on Criminal Justice will show how District Magistrates have, in late years, withdrawn from the exercise of original judicial functions.

Note on the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill of 1883, by J. WARE-EDGAR, Esq., dated April 26, 1883.

Although the opinions of the officers consulted by me will not be received in time to enable me to submit, before being relieved, the divisional report on the subject called for by Government, I feel bound to put on record my views, because almost all my service, from my first appointment to Cachar in 1863 until I left Chumparun in 1882, was spent in tea and indigo-growing districts. I have had, therefore, perhaps unequalled opportunities of studying the conditions under which these industries are carried on, and have been forced to devote much thought to the very difficult questions connected with the administration of criminal justice in cases in which Europeans are concerned, and the best means of affording effectual protection to the Natives of the country when their interests or rights get into conflict with those of members of the dominant race. Besides this, it appears to me that some most important points connected with the proposed measure have been overlooked, both by its opponents and its supporters, and that these points, if properly understood, would go far to account for the extraordinary outburst of indignation with which the Bill has been received, especially by Europeans living in the tea districts.

Chief among these matters are the real character and history of the compromise of 1872, and the radical and irreconcilable difference between the principle of the Bill as brought into Council, and all the proposals on the subject made since 1857, including that made last year by Sir Ashley Eden, on which the opinions of the Local Governments were obtained. The Honourable Mr. Evans, in his speech in Council of the 9th March, gave an account of what had happened previous to and in 1872, and it is not necessary for me to repeat what he has said. I shall merely therefore supply some omissions made by him.

In the first place, he has not brought out with sufficient clearness the facts that previous to 1872 there were really two distinct questions in dispute—the question of increasing the jurisdiction over European British subjects of those mofussil courts in which Europeans presided, and the question of giving jurisdiction to Natives over European British subjects; and that the opposition to the former of these proposals was at least as great as that to the latter. In illustration of this, I shall merely quote passages from a speech made by Sir Arthur Buller on the 7th March, 1857, in which he acknowledged frankly that the privilege of British subjects to be tried before the Supreme Court could no longer be maintained, as its maintenance either entailed intolerable hardship upon honest men, or ensured impunity to crime. After this admission, he enumerated the courts to which it was then proposed to make European British subjects amenable. They were the Sessions Court, the Magistrate's Court, Courts presided over by First Assistants to magistrates and Principal Sudder Ameeris, and Courts presided over by Second Assistants to Magistrates and Moonsifs, and said: "It was against these tribunals that British subjects protested against all as incompetent, and against some as open to the evil influences of personal prejudice and antagonism of race." Later on in the speech, after calling attention to the danger Europeans would run if liable to be tried by prejudiced Muhammadans, he took up the question of the European courts and asked whether any of the Members of Council really thought that "the boys who acted as Assistant Magistrates, or that the Magistrates themselves, wholly untrained, as they were, to their profession, and wholly unaided either by a jury or by any competent bar, were fitting depositaries of the vast powers proposed to be entrusted to them? He imputed to these gentlemen no fault save that of youth and inexperience. Fine, manly, intelligent young fellows they were, all fully his equals, he was free to admit—many greatly his superiors in natural abilities; but still the fact was undeniable: they were young and inexperienced, and youth and inexperience were not the best qualifications for the Bench."

The meeting prevented the further discussion of the Procedure Bill for some time, and when the matter was again taken up in 1859, the proposal to extend the jurisdiction of the mofussil courts does not seem to have been revived, but there was a very evident desire in the minds of some of the Members of Council to remove the disqualification under which the Natives laboured in dealing with cases in which European British subjects were concerned. In the course of the debates on this subject, Sir Barnes Peacock, then Chief Justice of Bengal and Vice-President of the Council, made the following statement:—"The Honourable Member for Bengal had referred to the section of the Charter Act which said that no Native of India was disqualified, as such, from holding any place, office, or employment under Government. The present question related not to disqualification, but to qualification. A Native was not disqualified from becoming a member of the Civil Service. He might go to England, pass his examination, and come out as a Civil Servant. He was not disqualified from becoming a Civil Servant, or, when a Civil Servant, from being appointed a Justice of the Peace; but he was not qualified to be a Justice of the Peace unless he was a Covenanted Civil Servant." It is quite clear from this that the Chief Justice considered that, under the statute then in force, a Native Covenanted Civil Servant was qualified to be a Justice of the Peace, and this opinion was not controverted by Mr. Harrington or Sir Charles Jackson, who followed Sir Barnes Peacock in debate.

In 1861 the question of extending the jurisdiction of the mofussil courts was not raised, so far as I recollect; but there was a controversy, much of which is scarcely intelligible to me, about the powers of Native Magistrates in dealing with European British subjects charged with offences. The results were that it was provided in section 39 of Act XXV. of 1861 that no person who was not a Justice of the Peace should commit or hold to bail a European British subject, and that the jurisdiction given by Statute 53 George III., clause 155, section 105, and Act VIII. of 1853, to Magistrates, was restricted by section 42 to Justices of the Peace. Act II. of 1869 consolidated and amended the law relating to the appointment of Justices of the Peace. Section III. provided that the Governor General in Council for the whole of British India, and local Governments for the territories under their jurisdiction (other than the presidency towns), might appoint Covenanted Civil Servants of the Crown in India, or other British inhabitants, if properly qualified, to act as Justices of the Peace. This description was reproduced from the Statute. It did not, therefore, affect the qualifications of Native Covenanted Civilians to be made Justices of the Peace, and this, I well recollect, was fully understood by Europeans in the tea districts. In July, 1870, Mr. Stephen introduced a Bill to amend the Criminal Procedure Code of 1861, and this was referred to the Select Committee on December 17 of the same year. This Bill, as committed, contained a proposal to allow Sessions Judges to dispose of charges against European British subjects, if they did not claim their right to be tried before one of the High Courts.

While it was being considered in Committee, two circumstances occurred which had important consequences—Messrs. Romesh Chunder Dutt, Behary Lall Gupta, and Surendra Nath Banerjea, the first Native Covenanted Civilians appointed to Bengal, having arrived in India in September, 1871, Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea was, very unfortunately as I have always thought, posted to Sylhet. I was at Shillong when this happened, and there met many planters from Assam. Subsequently I spent some time in the Sylhet district on my way to Cachar, and of course saw many planters in both districts. Their uneasiness and even alarm were very great. They expected that Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea would in a short time be made a Justice of the Peace, and they looked with great dread at the prospect of his being able not only to fine them heavily, but to commit them to the High Court. More than this, they assumed that there would be thenceforward a regular yearly influx of Native Civilians, many of whom would necessarily be sent to the tea districts, and in the course of time be made Justices of the Peace: and they prophesied that the consequence would be little short of ruin to the tea industry. Of course their forebodings were exaggerated, but I am bound to state that their fears of the result which might be expected to follow the employment of young and untrained Natives as Assistant Commissioners in the tea districts were not groundless, and that the planters would not have been the only or the chief sufferers. The injury done to the Natives of the tea districts, to the imported coolies in the gardens, and even to the Native officers themselves would have been far greater. The other matter to which I have alluded was a statement made in Council by Mr. Stephen on the 16th December, 1871, to the effect that the Committee had received a most important paper from the Government of Bengal, containing a suggestion that European British subjects should be made, to a great degree, amenable to the ordinary criminal courts of the country. Mr. Stephen added that the matter would be considered in Committee, but that owing to its importance he wished to have it made public as soon as possible.

The position, therefore, at the end of 1871 was this: Under the existing law, Native Covenanted Civilians were qualified to exercise some jurisdiction over European British subjects. There were then three such Civilians who might be expected to get these powers at any early date, and one of them was posted to a district where he would have jurisdiction over members of the most sensitive and jealous class of Europeans in the country. All people interested in tea feared this much more than they did a moderate extension of the jurisdiction of the courts presided over by Europeans, and they knew that they could not get the law changed without the assent of some at least of the members of Government. On the other hand, all concerned in the administration of the tea districts felt that the existing law restricting the jurisdiction of the mofussil courts was intolerable, that the evils acknowledged to exist in 1859 had increased ten-fold, and that a change was absolutely necessary for the sake of the natives of the country. It was widely felt that such a change was immeasurably more important than any further removal of the disqualifications of Native Magistrates, or even the maintenance of the statutory qualification of Native Covenanted Civilians. There was, however, a very influential minority, which though strongly opposed to any extension of the jurisdiction of any mofussil courts, did not share the alarm felt by the tea-planters at the prospect of Native Justices of the Peace exercising the restricted jurisdiction. Foremost among these was the Commander-in-Chief, Lord Napier of Magdala.

The result of all this was a compromise between the majority of the Select Committee and the non-official community, under which it was agreed that the non-official community should accept the extended jurisdiction of the mofussil courts, provided that none but a European British subject should have jurisdiction to enquire into a complaint or try a charge against a European British subject. This compromise was laid before Council by Mr. Stephen on Jan. 30, 1872, ten days before the assassination of Lord Mayo. It is probable, therefore, that the latter knew of it. It was not discussed in Council until 4th May, when Mr. Stephen distinctly stated that there had been a compromise with the general European population; and it is perfectly clear, from the whole course of the debate which followed, that the European community were held to have accepted the extended jurisdiction allowed to Justices of the Peace and Sessions Judges being European British subjects, on condition that Native Civilians, even when appointed to be Justices of the Peace under Act II. of 1869, should not have any criminal jurisdiction over European British subjects. The Commander-in-Chief subsequently moved an amendment, which he described as his protest against any extension of the powers of Magistrate for dealing with European British subjects. He was unsupported in this, and Mr. Stewart, the non-official Member of Council, stated that, in his opinion, they were practically bound by the recommendations of the Committee. I think it will be perfectly clear that the majority of the Legislative Council in 1872 did not merely give up a portion of a proposed law in order to facilitate the passing of the remainder, but practically repealed a part of an existing law as the consideration for the acceptance by the European community of entirely new provisions regarded by them with deep and traditional dislike, which was shared by one of the highest Members of the Executive Government, who would have been prepared to lead the opposition to the proposed innovation.

Personally, I have always regretted the disqualification of Native Covenanted Civilians, for I believe that the concession was unnecessary. A pledge not to employ them in tea or indigo districts would have satisfied the non-official community, and would have simply been giving sanction to a rule which should always be observed for the sake of all parties, but which is essential for the protection of the ryots in indigo districts and the coolies in tea districts. Apart, however, from the mistake which I hold to have been made in conceding the restriction in Act II. of 1859, I can testify that no measure of the Government passed in my time has been more beneficent in its effects than the extension of the jurisdiction of the mofussil courts over European British subjects, and that its admirable results have been in a great measure due to its having been accepted loyally by the classes affected, instead of being forced on them without their consent. As regards the concession then made to them, I hold, of course, that it cannot preclude the present Government from removing the disqualification of Covenanted Civilians or other Natives, but I think that it made it the duty of the Government to do all in its power to obtain the consent of the European community to any changes in that direction before formally proposing them, and that great care should have been taken to make such proposed changes definite and clear, to leave no doubt as to their scope and ultimate effect, and to avoid unnecessarily wounding susceptibilities, or giving ground for fearing that the law could be made by the executive authorities to do more than was intended by the Legislature.

Now, I think that the present Bill can be shown to be grievously faulty in every one of these respects. The principle of the existing law is that the European British subject is to be tried by another European British subject. But to this rule there are exceptions, viz., Native Presidency Magistrates and probably Native High Court Judges, and a Native Recorder of Rangoon, should one ever be appointed. Mr. Gupta, in his note of 30th January, 1882, proposed to add two more classes of exceptions, viz., Native District Magistrates and Native Sessions Judges, the general rule remaining unaltered. In like manner, Sir Ashley Eden, the Governments of Madras and Bombay, the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, the Chief Commissioners of the Central Provinces, British Burma and Assam, and the Resident of Hyderabad all proposed some sort of further exception to the existing rule, which all manifestly meant to retain. The Punjab Government was the only one which proposed to depart from the principle of the existing law. This principle has, however, been abandoned in the present Bill, which proposes to substitute what may be called an official qualification for the race qualification. I would add all District Magistrates and Sessions Judges to the present list of ex-officio Justices of the Peace, contained in section 25 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and would disqualify the class of European British subjects now eligible for appointment as nominated Justices, and substitute for this class the following four classes:—(1) Members of the Covenanted Civil Service; (2) Native Statutory Civil Servants; (3) Assistant Commissioners in Non-Regulation Provinces; and (4) Cantonment Magistrates. Now, in the first place, this new scheme disqualifies large classes of official and non-official Europeans, from whom the ranks of Justices of the Peace have hitherto been recruited. Taking the Bengal Civil List for the current quarter, I find two lists of Justices of the Peace for Bengal, Behar, and Orissa,—one containing those actually now resident in the Mofussil, and the second containing those now in Calcutta or on furlough, or employed under other Governments. In the first list I find the names of thirty-seven people who would not come under any of the classes in the proposed Bill. In the second list there are, I think, sixty-four such names, but I feel some doubt about one or two of these. The total number of Justices in the two lists is 333, out of whom about 100 belong to classes who would be disqualified by the Bill. Among these I find officers of the Army and Navy, Deputy Magistrates and other uncovenanted servants of Government, tea and indigo planters, landowners, merchants and lawyers. Of course the appointments of the present Justices are protected by section 7 of the Bill; but that is not material to the present argument, which is that if the Bill were to be passed the Government would in the future be deprived of the services of large classes which have been found useful in the past. I may add that the power of appointing such persons to be Justices of the Peace will become even more valuable as railways got made through remote jungly tracts, and ships began to frequent out-of-the-way ports. It will then be often more desirable, mainly in order to protect the natives, to be able to vest the Superintending Engineer engaged in constructing a line of railway, or the chief officer of a port, with the power of dealing with offences committed by Europeans. From a purely administrative point of view, therefore, the inconvenience caused by the disqualification of so many classes of Europeans would be very much greater than any that could arise from the disqualification of Native Civilians rising to be Sessions Judge or District Magistrate. It is manifest that, as a matter of administrative convenience, it is desirable to have as many Magistrates as possible qualified to deal summarily on the spot with petty offences of Europeans living in outlying districts. It is also manifest that the effect of this Bill will be, in the future, greatly to diminish the number of such Magistrates, and it is very remarkable that no local Government or local official appears either to have recommended or contemplated such a change. I am wholly unable to discover any practical reason for disqualifying whole classes of Europeans, and thus diminishing the facilities for the prompt disposal of petty cases. The number of Europeans that will be disqualified is very much greater than the number of natives who will be even constructively qualified by the Bill, and it must be borne in mind that no complaint has been made against the fitness of those to be disqualified. If the substitution of an official qualification for the present qualification cannot be carried out without disqualifying in a wholesale way so many persons now qualified, and thus diminishing the facilities for dealing with charges against Europeans which it was the object of the compromise of 1872 to gain, the proposal is clearly a retrograde one as regards the efficient administration of justice.

If the classes declared to be qualified by the Bill are analysed, the objectionable character of its principle will be still clearer. I say nothing about Covenanted Civilians, but I feel bound to submit that the European community have good grounds for protesting against Statutory Civilians being at present declared qualified. The system introduced by Lord Lytton is still on its trial, and I am not prepared to declare it to be a failure, without further experience of it; but it is impossible to ignore the fact that it is emphatically condemned by many, among both Europeans and Natives, best qualified to judge, and I have not heard a word in its favour from anyone whose opinion on the subject is worth having. But the most objectionable part of the Bill is that by which Assistant Commissioners in Non-Regulation Provinces are declared to be qualified. Covenanted Civilians and Statutory Civilians are both classes created and defined by law, and there can be no doubt as to what the terms connote, but Assistant Commissioner is a mere administrative expression, and the status and qualifications of the officers called by that name wholly depend upon executive authority. Yet of all the classes declared qualified in the new Bill, this is the one which touches the European British subject most nearly. It must be remembered that while there are only 71 regulation districts in the Bengal Presidency, including Burmah, there are about 105 non-regulation districts, and that tea is grown almost exclusively in these last. So far as I know, there is not a single tea-garden in a regulation district except that of Chittagong. Assam is non-regulation; so are Chota Nagpore, Darjeeling, Julpigori, the Chittagong Hill Tracts, Kangra, Kurseong, and, I think, the Doon. Besides this, there can be no doubt that the future of European enterprise, agricultural and industrial, lies in the wild undeveloped countries which now form the bulk of the Non-Regulation Provinces. In considering the bearing of the proposed legislation on the position of non-official Europeans in those provinces, we must not lose sight of the fact that, while the classes from whom Magistrates of districts and Sessions Judges in Regulation Provinces can be chosen are strictly limited by Acts of the British Parliament, there is absolutely no statutory restriction on the discretion of the Executive Government to appoint any person it chooses to be Deputy Commissioners in the non-regulation districts. For instance, no one but a Covenanted Civilian can be appointed Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs, except in certain cases expressly provided by Acts of Parliament, while any one may be appointed Deputy Commissioner of Cachar. Among the Deputy Commissioners and other officers who perform the duties of District Magistrates in the Non-Regulation Provinces, there are now about 50 Covenanted Civilians, the remainder being military officers or uncovenanted Europeans. As shown above, there is nothing in the law to prevent uncovenanted natives being appointed to these offices, but the officers so appointed would certainly be of great distinction and high character. There is not the same security about the Assistant Commissioners, who are now (including Judicial Assistant Commissioners) about 123 in number, several of these being natives, and of course it being possible that future vacancies may be largely filled up by natives, for, as pointed out above, the Assistant Commissioner is purely the creation of executive authority, which has in many cases changed the very title of the office. For instance, when I was first appointed to the non-regulation districts, the title was Assistant Superintendent in Cachar. In 1864 it was changed to Assistant Commissioner by an executive order. Below the Assistant Commissioners, there are about 280 officers called Extra Assistant Commissioners. These are mostly Natives, and it is no injustice to them to say that in all the Non-Regulation Provinces known to me, they are below the standard of Deputy Collectors in regulation districts. If the present Bill were passed, there would be nothing in any law to prevent the Executive Government changing the designation of these officers to that of Assistant Commissioner, and thus making them qualified for appointment as Justices of the Peace. If it be said that this is a highly improbable contingency, I answer that the improbability does not affect my argument, which is that the term Assistant Commissioner has no legal connotation, and that it should not therefore be used to describe a class in a law where clearness and definiteness are essential.

I am compelled, on the grounds above stated, to record an emphatic condemnation of the principle of the Bill, as disqualifying large classes of men hitherto qualified, whose disqualification will cause distinct administrative inconvenience, as directly qualifying one class which has not yet shown any signs of fitness to exercise the powers to be entrusted to it, and another so-called class which has no defined legal existence, and as indirectly giving the Executive Government power to extend the qualification to a large and undefined body of officers, the greater number of whom are undoubtedly unfitted to be Justices of the Peace.

To the question whether I consider it advisable now to fall back on Sir Ashley Eden's alternative proposal, and give Native Covenanted Civilians who rise to be Magistrates or District Judges the same powers that Europeans have in the same capacities, I am obliged regretfully to answer that I do not. I have always been strongly in favour of the measure. The argument of administrative convenience has no doubt been made too much of, but there are other, and, to my mind, stronger arguments derived from considerations of policy and equity, which there is no need to reproduce here. I believe and earnestly hope that before long it may be possible to remove the disqualifications created in 1872; but I see clearly that it ought not to be attempted at present. Apart from the fact that this limited measure will not affect that which Government has declared to be the great object of the present Bill—the removal in toto of the "race qualification of the Judge"—there are other reasons of overwhelming weight for the postponement of the measure. Angry passions have been aroused; a deep sense of injury has grown up, as, I think, not unnaturally, in the minds of the European non-official community; vague and wild suspicions have been formed of the ultimate intentions of the Government. Such conditions make calm consideration of, or assent to, a measure like this impossible; and the evils of forcing it on the community affected by it are so great and so alarming that the Government would not be justified in incurring them. I do not desire to go into the details of the evils, which will readily present themselves to the minds of officers who have had district experience; but I would add that, under such adverse circumstances, the gift of these new powers would be eminently disastrous to the recipients, and greatly increase their difficulties in discharging satisfactorily the very arduous and responsible duties of the posts to which they are about to be promoted.

No. 135Jct., dated 2nd May, 1883.

From—LORD H. ULICK BROWNE, Commr. of the Rajshahye and Cooch Behar Division,

To—The Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Judicial Department.

In reply to Government letter No. 1518J., dated 27th March, 1883, with enclosures, I have the honour to report on the Bill to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X. of 1882.

I have consulted six selected officers in this division, of whom four are European district officers and two are natives; one of the latter is an experienced Native Deputy Magistrate, and the other the ablest of that class serving in that division.

2. None of the officers consulted have ever known any inconvenience to arise from the exclusion of Native Covenanted Civilians from the power of trying European British subjects on criminal charges. In my own experience, Mr. Dutt was for a short time in charge of a subdivision in which two or three Europeans resided, and Mr. B. L. Gupta acted as Magistrate of Rungpore, in which there are a number of Europeans of different classes stationed at Saidpore; and in neither instance was there any such inconvenience.

3. Indeed, when the circumstances anterior to, and connected with, the introduction of the Bill are considered, it seems scarcely possible that any real inconvenience can have been felt. The Code of Criminal Procedure was amended in March, 1882, by the passing of Act X. of that year, and the amending Bill was under consideration and discussion for a long time previously. Though divisional and district officers were invited to make suggestions, and though it was open to the public to do so, I believe no district or divisional officer, and no non-official, ever suggested the present measure; while it is certain that it, or something like it, would have been suggested if any inconvenience had been actually experienced. I think only one person in the whole country made any suggestion in the direction of the Bill, and he was a Native officer serving in Calcutta. If this impression is correct, it seems to indicate, without need of corroboration, that the measure is uncalled for; but there is something more to be said in support of that view. There can be no want of officers who exercise the power of trying European British subjects, as the Bill proposes to prevent all European Deputy Magistrates appointed hereafter from exercising those powers; there are few criminal cases in which Europeans are the accused; and lastly, the Bill originated in the personal representation of a Native Civilian, submitted in the interests of his own dignity and that of a few other Native Civilians and nothing more.

I think it can scarcely be denied, if the denial is to be supported by facts, that, speaking generally, there has been no administrative inconvenience, and that if such has ever been experienced, it can only have been in a very few isolated cases.

4. As regards inconvenience in the future for want of the provisions of the present Bill, the officers consulted think there is no reason to apprehend any worth thinking of, though Colonel Morton remarks that if Government choose to appoint a native to Julpigoree, then, on the complaint of a coolie that a tea-planter had boxed his ears, inconvenience would result if there was no qualified European magisterial officer at the station. Mr. Wace very naturally cannot conceive that, under the circumstances of Darjeeling, any but a European will ever be appointed to the charge of that district, whether the Bill becomes law or not, and the same may be said of Julpigoree. In the Legislative Debate of March last, His Excellency the Viceroy contemplated as many as one-sixth of the total number of Covenanted Civilians being natives in the course of time. Judging from the experience of the past as to the number of natives who enter the Civil Service by competition, that time must, under the operation of the present combined system of competition and nomination, be somewhat far off, as it is not to be supposed that Government, on seeing that natives are unsuccessful in the competition, will appoint a large number of them in this country, and thus take a decided step towards displacing the competitive system and returning to one of simple nomination. So, even if there were no strong objections to the Bill, it does not seem advisable to legislate for a somewhat distant future in a matter which contains elements of uncertainty. It may be, and it seems to me very probable, that long before we reach the time when one-sixth of the Covenanted Civilian natives Government will find out that the present system of nominating natives, under which alone is there any chance of that result, does not answer; and new as the system is, it would be an unsound basis on which to legislate for a future time. Even if, however, the nomination system is found to answer, and the proportion of one-sixth of natives is attained, it is not, after all, a large proportion, and so few cases would have to be transferred from one district to another for want of powers to try Europeans, that I should not expect any inconvenience worthy of consideration for want of the provisions of the Bill; certainly none that would (not outweigh, but) nearly equal the disadvantages of applying them.

5. Turning to the principle of the Bill, I find in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, signed by Mr. Ilbert, the following passages:—

"The Government of India has accordingly decided to settle the question of jurisdiction over European British subjects in such a way as to remove from the Code, at once and completely, every judicial disqualification which is based merely on race distinctions.

"With this object the present Bill has been prepared."

The Bill does not propose to abolish the special jurisdiction of the High Court, of Sessions Judges, and of Magistrates exercising first class powers over Europeans, or to alter the limited powers of sentencing them now exercised by Sessions Judges and by Magistrates with first class powers. There is thus, it seems to me, but little principle in the Bill, which is only a measure for modifying the exceptional privileges of Europeans on a single point, and is, therefore, proposed in the hope of securing an advantage which, even from the view of the supporters of the Bill, can only be a very slight one, while the disadvantages of the measure from the opposite point of view are enormous.

Mr. Wace observes as follows on the limited principle of the Bill:—

"If it could be pretended that on the passing of this law all distinctions between the two races would disappear from our legal procedure, one might be disposed to run some risk to secure such an end. This proposed change, however, touches but one point of distinction. The Government declares its intention of maintaining other privileges of the European, the habeas corpus, the limitation of powers of Magistrates and Sessions Judges over European British subjects. Its maintenance of these privileges is an admission of the strongest arguments against this Bill. The other privilege, which it is now proposed to withdraw, rests on the same principle. Disavow the principle in respect of one, and you must disavow it as regards others, so far as logic and theory are concerned."

6. The next point for consideration is how far the very limited principle of the Bill really applies to the case to meet which it is directed. His Excellency the Governor General, in his speech in the Legislative Council, based the principle on the Queen's Proclamation of 1858, announcing that, as far as may be, Her Majesty's subjects, of whatever race or creed, be impartially admitted to offices in the public service, the duties of which they may be qualified by their education, ability, and integrity duly to discharge. There is first a reservation, which it may fairly be presumed was made to meet special circumstances which, it cannot be denied, are found in the present case; and then, before the concession is to be applied, the subjects of it must be qualified to duly discharge the duties of the office to which they aspire. Here there arises a very important question which seems to be begged by the supporters of the Bill—viz., whether Native Civilian are qualified to try European British subjects.

7. The supporters of the Bill represent, though it is in connection with the point of doing away with an anomaly, and not with that of the fitness of Native Civilian, which is assumed, or taken for granted, that as natives have been in the habit of trying Europeans in Calcutta for many [the present Under Secretary of State for India said that for thirty years natives had been constantly and satisfactorily doing so] years, and giving satisfaction, Native Civilian should try Europeans in the mofussil, and if they do, will give satisfaction there. The first part of this representation has been shown by the Englishman newspaper to be a remarkable misconception of fact. Only three natives have held office as Magistrates of Calcutta during the entire period from 1856 to date, for an aggregate of about seven out of 27 years, and for 21 consecutive years no native sat on the bench. Again, out of the three Native Magistrates, one was removed because he gave the reverse of satisfaction. Thus the Bill cannot, as a matter of fact, be supported on the ground of Natives having sat as Magistrates in Calcutta and given satisfaction there. If, however, the facts were just the reverse, the English press, both in this country and at Home, have pointed out the great difference between the position of the Magistrate in Calcutta, watched by the press, the Bar, and the High Court working where false cases against Europeans are extremely rare, and obliged to be most careful in the discharge of his duties, and a Magistrate in the mofussil, without any such checks, working where a false case against a European is far from uncommon. To this I would add that, as a general rule, cases against Europeans in Calcutta are petty and easy, such as sailors charged with being drunk and disorderly (to which charges they frequently plead guilty), while cases against Europeans in the mofussil are often difficult, and the charges more serious. Very few cases against Europeans have come before me as a mofussil Magistrate in which a marked bias was not shown against the accused by native witnesses, and in which the evidence did not require much sifting. But as Mr. Ilbert has himself borne testimony to the difficult nature of such cases in the mofussil, nothing more need be said on that point.

8. On this question of the fitness of Native Civilian to try Europeans, the senior native officer consulted, Baboo Shama Churn Chatterjee, can see no difference between a civil and a criminal case, and argues that because natives have given satisfaction in trying civil suits, they are competent to try criminal cases, whoever may be accused therein. Baboo Hurry Mohun Chundra thinks natives who entered the Covenanted Civil Service by competition are quite competent to try European British subjects, but he goes on to say—

"It is my humble opinion that it is extremely probable that the Civilian appointed under the nomination system will in no way prove competent to be appointed District Magistrates or Sessions Judges, and they will therefore not only prove incompetent to try European British subjects, but for various reasons I venture to think they will probably not prove competent to do the multifarious responsible duties attached to the offices of District Magistrates and Sessions Judges, i.e., it is my humble opinion that only those Native Civilian who have got into the Covenanted Service by competition are competent to be appointed District Magistrates and Sessions Judges, or, in other words, to try European British subjects. Those of the native members of the Civil Service are competent who have obtained a liberal education in England, who have largely associated with Englishmen, and have become acquainted with their manners and customs, and have some knowledge of the inner life of English society, and who, on return from England, live more like Englishmen than natives of the country. As regards the Native Civilian who have been appointed under the nomination system, my honest opinion is that they are in no way superior to the members of the Sub-Executive Service, and have no recommendations whatever, except that they are related to some of the Rajahs. Some of these men are, I think, very inferior to some of the Deputy Magistrates. To make these inferior men, who, I beg to be permitted to say, are not fit for the Civil Service, District Magistrates or Sessions Judges, would be lowering that Service in the estimation of the public, and would, so far as I have been able to understand, give satisfaction to neither the Europeans nor the people of this country.

"My humble opinion on the first point, therefore, is that I agree with the 'principle' of the Bill in so far as its scope is to give jurisdiction over European British subjects to the Native Civilian who have entered the Covenanted Civil Service after passing the competitive 'examination held in England.'"

Mr. Glazier says—

"The trial of a case affecting a European is generally difficult and complicated, and I think very few Bengalee Magistrates would be found competent to deal with such cases satisfactorily, and a single mistake would be serious. Even if the Magistrate were capable and experienced, he would be in the cruel position of knowing that if, resisting the weight of local pressure, he acquitted the accused, he would be subjected to the taunts of the native press; while, if he convicted, European opinion would similarly doubt the justice of the sentence. His position would be more difficult than that of a European Magistrate in similar circumstances, who would not be afraid of being misjudged if he convicted, and would hold cheap the murmurs, both deep and loud, of the native press, if he acquitted.

"The position of the European in this country is an isolated one. If he is so unfortunate as to become implicated in a criminal case, he will have a host of enemies to fight against single-handed, and it is of the utmost moment to him that he should have on the Bench some one who can understand his feelings and his pleas. How different is the position of a native bhadro lok in a similar position; he has no lack of friends. When the license-tax was introduced a few years ago, a Sub-Deputy Collector plundered the people wholesale for his own profit, and though the case was so clear against him that he fled to avoid trial, yet, on his 'mokhtarnama' being filed in the case, every mookhtar in the place signed his name."

Mr. Newbery writes—

"At one period of my service I have had very considerable experience in cases arising amongst a low social stratum of Europeans, and I feel perfectly certain that no native, however well-educated, or whatever good use he had made of his two or three years' residence in England, would have understood the language in which those cases were conducted, or the ideas meant to be conveyed by that language.

"I do not think, also, that our Bengalee civilians would care in the mofussil to exercise the power, even if it were given them, especially in the case of the burly British loafer, who is the European British subject most frequently up for trial in the mofussil. It is very different in Calcutta, where there are European inspectors of police and European constables always within hail of the court. But the sight of a half-inebriated European ruffian, guarded only by a few puny Bengalee policemen, would, I think, be quite enough to ensure that our Bengalee Magistrate of the district would at once make the case over to his European Joint Magistrate.

"The argument that Native Magistrates trying Europeans in Calcutta have been a success, and that therefore they are likely to be a success in the mofussil, appears to my mind fallacious in the extreme, for the following reasons:—

- 1st—From the list and dates published in The Englishman, it would appear that Native Magistrates have been the exception rather than the rule;
- 2nd—That their decisions have by no means given general satisfaction;
- 3rd—That having an unlimited bar and public opinion to guide them, and an ever present High Court to correct their wrongdoings, there are in Calcutta checks upon them which would be entirely wanting in the mofussil."

9. As already observed, Mr. Ilbert, in introducing and supporting the Bill, observed that criminal cases against Europeans are exceptionally difficult; and he went on to say that they put a severe strain on the judicial qualities of tact, judgment, patience and impartiality. Of the correctness of this remark there can be no doubt, and my experience leads me to the conclusion that, great as is the improvement effected in a native by a residence in England for three years, the above mentioned qualities are not thereby developed to a degree sufficient to render him fit to try such cases, while another equally important quality, viz., courage, is very rarely developed at all. How often we see natural good judgment and a desire to be impartial rendered of little effect in a superior native by the hasty conception of prejudice; and what an every day matter it is to see such a man quite unable to be impartial, because he never forgets a trifling misunderstanding or difference with another, or a fancied want of respect towards himself in conduct or action, and as a consequence cherishes hatred against that other for evermore, and never loses an opportunity of doing him an injury. Though these faults are diminished by the advantages of a short residence in England, it is to be feared that a much longer residence, if not a change of nature, will be necessary before they can be entirely eradicated. As regards courage, how few of the best natives possess that quality to the degree sufficient, on the one hand, to enable a Magistrate to acquit a European with the knowledge that the order would be followed by a storm of unpopularity with the Native Magistrate's fellow-countrymen, and a series of attacks by the native press, taking the shape of accusations of incompetency or wilful injustice done out of a desire to please the ruling race; or, on the other hand, to enable him to convict when he knows that a series of letters with editorial comments will appear in the English newspapers, dwelling on his unfitness for the post he occupies. Again, in the course of three years' residence in England, a native learns nothing of the lower class of Europeans, such as guards, engine-drivers, plate-layers, overlookers in mills, subordinate engineers, who are the very class most likely to come before a Magistrate. Not only is a Native Civilian unable to understand and follow the thoughts, feelings, and motives of such men, but there would almost always be a serious risk of his inability to understand the language they use, so entirely different to that spoken by those with whom he came in contact in England, resulting in great injustice. The native has not the advantage we have of constant daily practice for years in conversing with the lower classes of another race, who speak another language; and how long it takes to some of us to understand them thoroughly.

10. As I consider a Native Civilian who has entered the Service by competition unfit to exercise the powers with which it is proposed to invest him, it may be imagined that I hold this view much more strongly in the case of Natives appointed to the Civil Service in this country on mere nomination, and without the great advantages gained by a residence in England. Judging from what I have seen and heard of these young men, they possess no qualities that specially promise to make them one whit better than any other young men who, having a good education, are appointed as Deputy Magistrates. Some are of good family and some are not, and there is little more to be said about them. Until these appointments were made, it was held that the standard of qualifications necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of officers held by Covenanted Civilians were much higher than in the cases of offices held and duties discharged by Deputy Magistrates; and I cannot imagine how it can be expected that the young men nominated as Covenanted officers will ever be more competent to be Magistrates, Collectors, and Judges, than any Deputy Magistrates, and Deputy Collectors who give satisfaction in the discharge of their duties. So far as I have seen or heard of the nominees, they are unlikely to be ever fit for posts held by Civilians of, say, twelve years' standing and upwards as regards the discharge of the ordinary duties of Covenanted officers. Much less are they likely to be fit to try cases of exceptional difficulty, and calling for the exercise of all the highest qualities of a good judicial officer.

11. Assuming (as it seems to me incorrectly) that Native Civilians are fit to try Europeans, the supporters of the Bill say it will do away with the anomaly of two men of the same standing and qualifications, in the same service, not exercising the same powers, which is a slur on the native who is not allowed to exercise them. Nothing put forward in support of the Bill has been more fully treated than this plea. The English Press in India and at Home have shown in letters and leading articles that India is a country full of anomalies, Hindus and Muhammadans having each separate laws of inheritance and marriage; that Native women above the lowest classes are exempted from appearance in the witness-box; and that a similar privilege is granted to men of a certain rank; all these anomalies being inconvenient, and making the administration of civil and criminal justice difficult. The following passage from Mr. Wace's letter indicates that, if the Bill passes, there will be a greater anomaly than that which the Bill proposes to remove:—

"That the Government of India is, I presume, not prepared to put a Bengali Civilian in charge of a Punjab district. Is it unnatural that the European, who has conquered the Punjabi, should resent being put into a position in which the Government would not think of putting the Punjabi?"

It will indeed be an anomaly if an European British subject is made liable to be tried by men who are not considered fit to try Natives of the Punjab.

The replies that have appeared to what may be called the anomaly plea go on to say this anomaly is only a privilege like those referred to above as enjoyed by the Natives, viz., by Hindoos and Muhammadans, in the shape of special laws, and by Native women and by Native men of rank in regard to exemption from appearance in law courts; that as special privileges as to choosing the nationality or race of some of the members of the Courts that try them are granted to Englishmen accused of criminal offences in Turkey, Egypt, China, and Japan, which are foreign countries, how much more should a similar privilege be granted to Englishmen and Englishwomen in India, a part of the British Empire? To these I would add the question, "Are not Englishmen and women and other Europeans entitled to the privilege granted to the Native sepoys, of choosing whether they will be tried by Europeans or Natives?"

As Mr. Glazier remarks, the anomaly and privilege which the Bill proposes to remove are the least objectionable and least obtrusive of all that we encounter in the Courts; and, as remarked by Mr. Newbery, it is after all nothing less than a great constitutional privilege of an Englishman to be tried by his peers, and one of which he should not be deprived except on the strongest grounds.

12. Having expressed my opinion, and those of the officers consulted, on the two points specially mentioned in the Government letter under reply, I request permission to say something about some other objections to the Bill.

13. The Government of India deny that there is any intention of proceeding further in the same direction, and say the Bill is a final measure. On this point Mr. Wace says:—

"It has been pledged for this Bill by its author that it has the elements of finality in it. The utterances of the Native press since that assertion was made must surely have disabused the Government mind of this fallacy. Over and over again it has been declared that this concession is accepted merely as one step towards absolute equality between Native and European. . . . Let not its (the Bill's) authors shut their eyes to the fact that logic must lead them eventually to abrogate the other privileges of which at present they appear to be as stout champions as the opponents of the Bill. So far, then, from there being the elements of finality in this Bill, it seems to me but the first step to a policy the dangers of which have been fully pointed out by Sir Fitz-james Stephen."

I agree with Mr. Wace in thinking that if the Bill is passed it would be difficult for Government to resist outcries for the extension of its principle, and that a refusal to extend it will make the Government as unpopular with the natives, whose aspirations to equality with the ruling race have been created by the Bill, as the passing of the Bill will make Government unpopular with Europeans.

14. It should, I think, be remembered that there is no general wish for the measure on the part of the natives. There is only a single class—the educated Bengali—who desires it in the least, the people generally being entirely unconcerned; if consulted, they would, I am sure, be most ready to acquiesce in Europeans enjoying a special privilege just as the natives do.

15. Lastly, if there were no other grounds for letting things remain as they are, the strong feeling on the subject among Europeans is alone a sufficient reason for abandoning the Bill. During my long service in this country, I have never known an expression of feeling nearly so strong and so universal (or so nearly universal), and such a remarkable concurrence of opinion among non-official and official Europeans alike, as has been elicited by this Bill. If it becomes law, then all non-official Europeans in the country, or, in other words, the one non-official class from whom Government can confidently expect aid and support in a time of need, will be alienated, and I believe Mr. Wace is correct in thinking that this class will henceforward, under a sense of undeserved injury, only take part in public business to the extent absolutely necessary for their own personal interests, and will cease to do so in order to aid the administration. All great commercial undertakings in this country are due to the capital, enterprise, and energy of Europeans, the natives only taking a small part when success is assured, or only availing themselves of what is provided by Europeans; and any measure that will make this class less inclined to reside in India will give a serious check to the operations through which the natives have been so greatly benefited and prospered. This check will, moreover be the act of the Government, applied at a time when Government desire to encourage and promote private enterprise more than ever.

16. I have now endeavoured to show—

That no inconvenience has been experienced in the past in this division for want of the provisions of the Bill, and that from all the circumstances connected with the introduction of the Bill, it is extremely unlikely that any inconvenience worthy of notice can have been experienced anywhere.

That the expectation of inconvenience in the future rests on an uncertain basis; that if that basis proves more sure than seems likely, the inconvenience, whatever it may be, will only be experienced at a future time so distant that it is not advisable to legislate for it now; and that if the inconvenience is ever experienced at all, it will be trifling, consisting of the occasional transfer of a case to another district, and of no importance whatever when weighed against the objections to the Bill.

That the principle of the Bill is extremely limited, not bringing about uniformity of system or equality, but only depriving Europeans of one privilege out of several, though they value it dearly, and thus effecting very little at a great and serious cost.

That the principle is based on the assumption that Native Civilians are fit to exercise the powers of trying Europeans, while the best of the two classes of Native Civilians, viz., those who have entered the Service by competition, are deficient in the exceptional qualities which the supporters of the Bill admit to be required for the exercise of such powers; are also wanting in experience and knowledge of the motives, feelings, and language of the majority of the Europeans likely to be tried; and that this class of Native Civilians are therefore not fit to try Europeans, while there are no grounds for thinking that the nominated Native Civilians can ever be nearly as good as the others, much less that they will ever be fit to try Europeans.

That the plea that the Bill will remove a privilege which is an anomaly has no force in the face of the many other anomalies connected with our Courts, and the privileges enjoyed by the Natives and by European British subjects in this and other countries.

That if the Bill is passed, Government will have a great difficulty in making it a final measure.

That neither the country generally, nor any large section of the people, care about the measure, but only one small class, viz., the educated Bengalis.

That if there were no other grounds for abandoning the Bill, the unparalleled feeling it has created is alone sufficient for withdrawing it, as it would be in the highest degree impolitic to alienate such an important class as the non-official Europeans, to whom Government and the natives owe so much assistance, progress, and prosperity, especially at a time when Government look to those Europeans for further important steps in the same direction.

17. For these reasons I sincerely hope that Government will withdraw the Bill. Probably the only reason why there is any hesitation about it is because the non-official European community have allowed their strong feelings in regard to it to carry them away, and have used unseemly language, some even assuming an attitude of hostility towards the Government. But in this, as in all matters, Europeans may claim to be treated as well as Natives are treated. For many years the Native Press, and especially the Vernacular Press, have systematically used most unbecoming language towards the Government, accusing it and its officers of wilful injustice to Natives, of undue favour to Europeans, and of generally bad motives. This, too, has been continuously written and published by those who knew all the time how falsely they were writing. And yet all this has never affected the measures or policy of Government in the least, and has never prevented the passing or altering of laws, or the issue of executive orders calculated to benefit the Natives. I think that in this instance the language and bearing of non-official Europeans may be overlooked also.

[FROM THE "TIMES OF INDIA" OF OCT. 5.]

We have at last received the text of Reuter's message from Simla describing the results of the opinions on the Ilbert Bill; and with the text before us we are constrained to say that the explanation given by Reuter's agent through the medium of several Indian newspapers is wholly insufficient. The telegram, which, be it noted, was forwarded from Simla on the evening of Friday, the 7th September, said that "out of a total of one hundred and forty, one hundred and fourteen are in favour of and only twenty-six opposed, to the principle or policy of the measure." The explanation given by the Simla agent, if his apologists are to be trusted, was so delightfully simple that it seemed to carry immediate conviction with it. "The error occurred," we were told, "through the omission of a cypher in the figure of 206 opinions stated to be against the Bill." Nothing could be simpler. An "ought" drops out and 206 becomes 26. There was nothing for it but to pity the misfortunes that seem to track the telegrams on the Ilbert Bill, and we think that Reuter's agent might in future follow the example of other business men in India and employ a cypher code whenever he has to telegraph important figures. Unfortunately, this simple theory completely breaks down when we turn to the formal explanation furnished by the Secretary of Reuter's Telegram Company to the London papers. "In consequence of the extraordinary discrepancy . . . our correspondent was asked by telegraph to furnish an explanation. From his reply it seems that a most serious error occurred in the transmission of his telegram over the wires; that instead of the 114 opinions being favourable and only twenty-six contrary, as received by us, the figures actually sent by our correspondent were 114 in favour of and 205 (two hundred and five) against the policy of the Bill." Here, unluckily, the dropped out "ought" theory disappears altogether, and an explanation that seemed plausible becomes impossible. In the first place we have to believe that an ought drops out and "206" becomes "26"; in the second place that a one drops out and "206" becomes "205"; in the third place, that the loss of an ought in "205," is a valid excuse for "26" as a result; and in the fourth place, that either "206" or "205" represent the opinions in opposition to the Bill, which unfortunately they do not. But the second statement as to the 114 opinions being in favour of the Bill is almost as inexplicable as the first. The opinions in favour of the Bill, even by the most liberal interpretation, only amount to half this number. How, then, did Reuter's Simla agent arrive at it? And this brings us to a more difficult question still. The opinions were published for the use of the press on the evening of Friday, the 7th September, in the form of a supplement to the Gazette of India, but owing to their bulk they were printed and issued at Calcutta, not at Simla. They were not available at Simla. Two days before this we had instructed our Simla correspondent to inquire from the proper authorities when they would be issued, and he was informed that they would only be issued at Calcutta on Friday evening. Unless Reuter's Simla agent is in league with Madame Blavatsky and her friend Koot Hoomi Lal, it is simply impossible that he could at Simla read, digest, and resume a volume of more than 500 pages on the very same night that it was published at Calcutta.

A little assistance of some kind must have been necessary; and from internal evidence it is, we think, pretty clear that the volume was not before him when he telegraphed. He begins: "A large number of opinions of the provincial authorities upon the Ilbert Bill are published to-day." If he had had the volume before him he would have seen that it was complete and final, that it contained all the opinions that had been collected, and he would surely never have used the vague expression "a large number." Then in the names he actually mentions he mixes up the opinions as to compromise with the opinions approving of the Bill, whereas, as the Times points out, these recommendations mean nothing but this, "Your Bill is published, and we are all in a very awkward position! Let it stand therefore in name, but let us all combine to deprive it of reality." It would seem impossible to have referred to the opinions themselves without realising this. He does not say a word about the universal consensus of opinion in Bengal and Assam, the provinces most likely to be affected by the Bill. Thus the most striking features in the whole volume never seems to have suggested itself to his mind. But if we take nothing but the actual figures he does give us, he is hopelessly out of his summary, and far from right on the one side as the other. On Saturday morning the news appeared in every paper in England, and was greeted by the Radical provincial papers as another party triumph. "Magna est veritas," cried one important country journal, "the people who said only the other day that nearly all the local authorities in India were opposed to the Ilbert Bill, and who, when Mr. Cross denied it, practically gave him the lie, have to sing very small to-day." "The sound principle of Liberalism," said another, "have secured a great and noble victory, the Indian native judges will gain what common sense cannot deny them," and so on. The report, as will be seen from the Times and other papers, was equally strong when Reuter's large majority dwindled down to a very small minority indeed. The mystery is not cleared up yet, and probably the blunder may be divided between Reuter's Simla agent and some official hanger-on, some busy-body who had no idea of the mischief he was doing, and held no warrant for meddling from the Viceroy or any high authority. It was unfortunate, as the Times says, that Reuter's Agency had been "used before to convey a wholly erroneous impression of what has been done in India to the minds of the people" of England. The second mistake when it was exposed was so glaring, that the inference drawn by the leading London journals, however much they may be regretted, can scarcely be called unnatural. We see that in a letter said to be addressed to the Viceroy's Secretary to Reuter's Simla agent he writes that he has communicated with Reuter's agent at Bombay to state "the facts" to the papers published there. We have not the slightest idea what these "facts" are, and here indeed we are afraid there is another mistake, for no communication of any kind has ever reached us, and we know nothing more of his "explanation" than the wonderful story of the cypher dropping out from "206"—somewhere, it was further alleged, beyond Teheran, to which point the message had gone correct, cypher and all.

MAIL NEWS.

The Times of India states that Mr. Seymour Keay who returned to India by the mail of Wednesday, Oct. 3, has been deputed by that organisation, the British India Committee, to form branches in India.

The Englishman says:—There are symptoms of a wish on the part of the Government that it should be believed that there is a probability of the further consideration of the Ilbert Bill being deferred to a late period of the coming session of the Council. We can readily understand its being considered desirable to avoid legislative action calculated to exacerbate the hostility of the European community to the Government during the Exhibition period. At the same time we feel bound to warn the public against either putting faith in any unofficial statements on the subject, or being thrown off their guard by any official statement short of a categorical announcement that the Bill has been entirely withdrawn. Our latest information on the subject is that the question when the Bill should be proceeded with has been referred for consideration to the Home Government.

The Times of India states that Sir George Birdwood is said to be the author of the article signed "John Indigo," published in a London review in reply to Mr. Seymour Keay's article on the "Spoilation of India."

The Viceroy will probably hold a levée at Government House, Calcutta, on the 5th December, and a drawing-room on the 7th December.

The Duke of Connaught will join at Meerut, and immediately afterwards take a month's leave and proceed to Calcutta.

The Central Rifle Meeting at Poona came to a close on Monday, Oct. 1, when the prizes were distributed by Sir John Ross, the Brigadier-General commanding the district.

H. E. Sir Frederick Roberts distributed the prizes to the successful competitors at the Southern India Rifle Association at Bangalore, on Saturday, Sept. 29. His Excellency, in the course of some remarks, dwelt upon the importance of rifle shooting, and also referred in flattering terms to the value and efficiency of the Volunteer force.

It is asserted on native authority that a volcanic hill, a little to the south of Bhawani Patna, in the Central Provinces, is showing some signs of life, that flashes of fire have been seen at night, and reports heard like salvos of artillery. The authorities at Kalabandi had sent out an emissary to verify the statement.

It is stated that Lieutenant-Colonel Henderson, C.S.I., will be in charge of the native princes who intend visiting the Calcutta Exhibition.

The tidal wave caused by the volcanic action at Java was felt strongly at Mauritius, the sea running up to an unusual height, and going back again as suddenly five or six times at intervals of about four minutes.

The Bombay Municipal Corporation having considered the recommendation of the Town Council on the grant of a sum of money for the festivities consequent upon the reception of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, have resolved to sanction the grant of Rs.2,000 for the preparation of an address and to provide a casket to contain the address; and they have also agreed to sanction a suitable contribution towards any fund which may be raised by the public.

Another considerable protective work, the Bellary-Kistna Railway, has just been sanctioned by the Secretary of State. Its length is about 250 miles, and its cost about 177 lakhs of rupees. The districts through which it is to run suffered severely during the last famine.

The opium revenue up to date has yielded more than was expected when the budget estimates were framed. Six months' sale of opium in Bengal have yielded 15½ lakhs over the estimate; which over-balances by a good deal, a deficit of three lakhs in the pass duty on opium exported from Bombay.

Intelligence has been received in Bombay that the s.s. Airy has been wrecked off Ras Furtak. All hands were saved.

An official notification was issued on Monday, Oct. 1, declaring that cholera is no longer epidemic in the city of Bombay.

At a meeting of the Council of the Anglo-Indian Defence Association, held on Friday, the present attitude of the Government with regard to the Ilbert Bill was discussed, and resolutions were passed pledging the Association to do all in their power to support a passive resistance of the law if passed.

The committee appointed by the Government of India to consider certain points in connection with the reorganisation of the Public Works Department has just completed its report. It accepts the Secretary of State's despatch of March last as containing valuable concessions, and trusts that in view of the stagnation now existing amongst the juniors it may be enforced pending a discussion of details.

Surgeon-Major R. Jackson, of the Pachmari depôt, died last week from the effects of hornet stings received whilst out hunting near Singhanhama.

The commission appointed at Hyderabad to inquire into the circumstances attending the fracas which took place between the Nawab Busheer-ood-Dowlah's troops and the local police has given its decision. The commission find that the affray was not a premeditated affair, and they absolve the Nawab from all blame.

MR. PLUNKET, M.P., ON THE ILBERT BILL.—A meeting under the auspices of the Earl's-court Conservative Club was held last evening at the club rooms, in Hogarth-road, for the purpose of considering the present political position. Sir Algernon Borthwick occupied the chair. The Right Hon. David Plunket, M.P., moved a resolution condemning the policy of her Majesty's Government as disastrous to the best interests of the country, both at home and abroad. He should confine his remarks that evening to a consideration of the Ilbert Bill, which has occasioned so warm a controversy in connection with Lord Ripon's Indian administration. That bill, he said, had created a more bitter feeling between natives and Europeans than had existed since the days of the great mutiny. The reality and gravity of the injury with which Englishmen in India were being threatened if this bill became law, fully justified the cry of indignation and alarm which had come from them. From the non-official Anglo-Indian world they had had an absolutely unanimous protest against the bill. As to the officials, the bill was opposed by an overwhelming majority of them, while the few friends of the measure were for the most part men of little Indian experience. We shall give a full report in our next issue.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1883.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay Oct. 11; Madras and Allahabad, Oct. 12; Calcutta Oct. 9.

The telegraphic announcement, in the Times of Wednesday, that the Bengal and Behar Zemindars are to hold a meeting in Calcutta on Nov. 17, to consider the official and other opinions on the Bengal Tenancy Bill recently gazetted, is the commencement of an agitation that will undoubtedly become great and vehement, if Lord Ripon does not give way in time. Of the present Viceroy's administration the epitaph will be recorded, "He meddled with nothing that he did not muddle."

We are only beginning to learn the strength of the hostile verdict given against this most one-sided and unjust measure by the district officers and other local authorities in Bengal. The Times Calcutta correspondent says broadly:—

"It may, however, be stated generally that the majority of the opinions are unfavourable to the measure, although a considerable number of the officials would accept the Bill with modifications, while a small number express general approval of it."

According to Reuter's only about 25 per cent. of those who have been consulted can bring themselves to express this general approval. Reuter's telegram was as follows:—

"The Calcutta Englishman publishes an analysis of the opinions on the Bengal Rent Bill which appear in to-day's Gazette. It goes to show that one half of those whose views are given regard the Bill as a confiscation of landlords' rights and as an uncalled for measure, which, while not possessing the elements of a permanent settlement, is calculated to embitter the relations between landlords and tenants, and to foster litigation. One-fourth of the remaining opinions express general approval of the measure, and the remaining fourth a modified disapproval."

THAT any Indian Viceroy should bring in a Bill which is regarded by a full half of those who will have to work it as a measure of confiscation, is surely a most deplorable thing. We trust that the discussion of the subject at the meeting of the East India Association in St. James's Hall to-day will attract public attention in England to the iniquity that is being wrought in Bengal, almost secretly, under cover of the dust that has been raised by the Ilbert Bill. If Mr. Ilbert had not already been canonised as the author of the Criminal Jurisdiction Bill, he would have attained equal notoriety as the mover of the most unjust Land Bill ever known in India.

HAVING learnt that such a large proportion of the responsible and experienced officers of Bengal denounce the Bill as a measure of confiscation, we are next informed that "an effort will be made to push it through" during the coming session of the Legislative Council—that is, before Parliament has well commenced work again.

It is much to be regretted that Lord Ripon should have omitted the usual Guard of Honour of the Calcutta Volunteers at Government House from the programme of the ceremonies to be observed on the occasion of the arrival of the Viceroy in Calcutta. This is tantamount to a declaration of open (social) war between the Viceroy and the non-official community of India; and though the sullen obstinacy of Lord Ripon in the matter of the Ilbert Bill has long rendered such a rupture only too probable, it is a deplorable thing that the first overt act of hostility should have come from the side of the Viceroy. The decision not to invite the volunteers to furnish a guard of honour is an act of petty malignity which cannot fail seriously to complicate the situation, already sufficiently embarrassed.

ONCE more we get a note of alarm about the prospects of the crops—this time from Bengal. The horrors of famine are terrible enough at all times, but they would be increased tenfold by the incapacity and unpopularity of the present Administration, so that we now have especial reason to pray that the country may be spared this additional scourge.

THE "Maizalla Khan," of whose murder in Afghan Turkestan by the Amir's order we now hear by telegram, is, of course, the well-known Ghilzai chief, Faizulla Khan. Here we have the reopening of another serious blood-feud.

THE Friend of India and Statesman, as the organ of Lord Ripon's Government, has the honour of being entrusted with the official explanation of the circumstances of the famous "Garbled Telegram, No. 1." This is what the Friend says:—

"We have received the following account of the famous telegraphic despatch to Reuter, that we believe is the true one:—

"Regarding the telegram sent through Reuter's agent on the Ilbert Bill debate, you know, I think, that the responsibility of sending it rested with Major Baring. Before leaving India he recorded a minute, explaining everything with regard to it. It appears that he consulted Mr. Ilbert as to the advisability of sending a telegram to show the true scope and object of the measure, and to correct the reports that were being sent home by the Times Calcutta correspondent. Mr. Ilbert agreed, and the Viceroy was then consulted. Lord Ripon gave an abstract of what he intended to say in Council, and the secretary in the Legislative Department was entrusted with drafting the message. Reuter's agent was informed of the intention of Government by Major Baring, and agreed to send the telegram, which was handed to him as soon as all the members had spoken, except the Viceroy. It is not known, I believe, that Major Baring has left a minute on the subject, in which he has explained the slight inaccuracies that crept into the telegram, no copy of which was kept. With regard to the question why it was not sent as an official telegram, Major Baring believed that he was following the usual practice as observed with the Budget every year. The exact cost of the telegram is stated in the minute. It was under Rs. 3,000."

"Major Baring's minute will, we hope, be brought forward in Council by-and-by."

Of course, this explains nothing. It does not tell us why the sending of the telegram through Reuter's Agency was kept a dead secret (as positively stated by the Pioneer) from the other Members of the Supreme Council. And as to the "slight (11) inaccuracies," and how they "crept" into the telegram, we can know nothing until Major Baring's minute is published. The verb "to creep" is a good descriptive one, as used in this connection; but it will be admitted that it does not fully and satisfactorily explain the "creeping process."

THIS is what the Civil and Military Gazette says of Mr. Gladstone's "ascendancy" speech:—

"Anglo-Indians can hardly be expected to hear with equanimity that the spirit of ascendancy in which they are inclined to indulge must be checked. This is what Mr. Gladstone says in the House of Commons; and this is the reason, he adds, why the opinions of Anglo-Indians on the Ilbert Bill are unworthy of attention. Lord Ripon is represented by the Premier as courageously doing his best to restrain the insolence of the Anglo-Indian; and the English Government is prepared to back him up. Judging from Reuter's summary, Mr. Gladstone's speech has been the most dangerous in its tendency of any that have been delivered by supporters of the Ilbert Bill. Even Lord Ripon, if he has the least share of the discretion with which he is credited, must see that, to foster the feeling that Anglo-Indians, as a class, are overbearing and must be checked, may lead to very serious consequences."

WITH respect to the Freight Market, we take the following from the Englishman of Oct. 9:—

"During the past week, a fair amount of business has been put through by sailing vessels, at rates gradually advancing, and more would have been done had owners not suddenly increased their limits; their action, coupled with the great scarcity of jute, has put an entire stoppage to business for the present."

Steamers have been almost entirely neglected, but one obtained a Dundee charter, the first of this season. Seven ships have been chartered during the week, and our unfixed tonnage has been reduced to 24,000 tons. Our unfixed tonnage stands at 24,796 tons."

THE following with respect to the Tea Market is from Messrs. Carritt and Co.'s Fortnightly Market Report, dated Oct. 9:—

"The usual weekly auctions have been held on the 27th ultimo and 3rd instant. At the former 12,589 packages were brought forward, of which 12,160 changed hands, and at the latter 17,060 were sold out of 18,413 catalogued. The sales of the 27th ultimo passed off with spirit at firm rates, prices occasionally ruling in favour of sellers. At the sales on the 3rd instant, owing to the fall in prices reported by wire from London during the past few days, a duller tone was noticeable, and the auctions passed off irregularly and without much animation, a lower range being established for all classes except Souchong kinds and broken teas, which ruled fairly steady. We quote a decline of 1d. on medium to good Pekoe and Broken Pekoe, and fully 1d. to 2d. on the finer grades, the fall being most noticeable on Pekoes. The quality generally was good and showed an improvement on late arrivals. Advices from the manufacturing districts, especially from Assam, report prospects of an early cold weather."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary of the week:—Mr. Syed Zain-ud-deen, Khan Bahadur, member of the Nizam's Inam Commission; Captain F. Thompson ("Shikaree Thompson") of the Invalid Establishment; Mr. W. Hounsom, constructor in the Bombay Government Dockyard; Rao Bahadur Narayan Gunesh Sathe, deputy commissioner southern districts, Bombay Presidency; Mr. John Watt Murdoch, chief engineer of Messrs. Rowell and Co.'s mill at Poozoondoung, Rangoon; Mr. William Cope, assistant Messrs. Grindlay, Groom, and Co., Bombay; Mr. David Cowie, of the firm of Colvin, Cowie, and Co., of Calcutta.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following is the official summary of the reports of the Revenue and Agricultural Department on the state of the season and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending Oct. 3:—

"In the Madras Presidency rain has fallen in varying quantities in all districts except Travancore, but more is still needed for dry crops in a few places. In Mysore the dry crops are withering in all districts from want of rain. In the Bombay Presidency rain has fallen in most districts, but more is urgently wanted in the Southern Mahratta country. No rain fell in Sind during the week, and the river was on the 1st inst. 2 feet 4 inches below the previous year's level. In Hyderabad and the Berars the rainfall has been again heavy, and a break is needed. In Rajputana and the Central India States light and fairly general rain fell during the week, and prospects are on the whole good. In British Burma rain has fallen in all districts, and the agricultural condition of the province continues satisfactory. In Assam and Bengal the rainfall has been general, and the weather continues seasonable. More rain is, however, wanted in several places in the Bengal Presidency for the transplanted rice crop, especially on the high lands. Rain has continued in the southern and eastern districts of the Central Provinces, and the prospects of the rice crop are improving. A break is needed in Nagpore and Vurdah for cotton and millets, and in the north of the provinces for preparation of ground for rabi sowings. In the North Western Provinces and Oudh no rain has fallen during the week, and the rainy season is believed to be over. Prospects are on the whole fair, but more rain would be beneficial in many districts. In the Punjab the rainfall of the week has been confined to three districts only, but prospects are on the whole good. Harvesting of paddy, cumboo, ragi, gingelly, &c., continues in the Madras Presidency, and the kharif is being cut in a few places in the Bombay Presidency. Rabi sowing is also in progress in Bombay. The damage from locusts is reported to be slight. In the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, Punjab, Rajputana, and the Central Indian States the kharif harvest is in progress, and ploughing and sowing for the rabi are also commencing. In Bengal the early crops have been almost all harvested, with a generally fair outturn, though in some districts the jute crop is below the average. There has been no increase of cattle disease in British Burmah, and elsewhere it is slight. A few deaths from cholera are still reported, and seasonable fever is prevalent in some places, otherwise the public health is good. Prices are either stationary or falling."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated Oct. 28:—

"A number of the opinions of official and other persons of the Bengal Tenantry Bill have been published in the Gazette. The views of the various persons consulted differ in so many details that it is impossible to give an adequate analysis within the limits of a telegraphic despatch. It may, however, be stated generally that the majority of the opinions are unfavourable to the measure, although a considerable number of the officials would accept the Bill with modifications, while a small number express general approval of it.

"The most important minute is that of the Lieutenant Governor. His Honour criticises the measure at some length, and observes that, although he has not been able on some points to approve the Bill as drafted, and has felt himself constrained to make suggestions at variance with some of its provisions, he is still bound to repeat that, if modified on those points, the Bill, in his opinion, will be a constitutional and successful effort to remedy abuses which unquestionably exist very widely, and the continued existence of which is incompatible with the peace and prosperity of the province.

"A select Committee on the Bill will meet towards the end of November, under the presidency of the Lieutenant Governor. The gravity and magnitude of the task before the Council render it doubtful whether the measure can be passed during the winter session; but it seems likely that an effort will be made to push it through.

"Meanwhile the zemindars, although they describe the Bill as subversive of all the rights of property, and as calculated to reduce them to the position of mere annuitants, show few signs of any intention to organise a strong opposition to it. Small meetings have indeed, occasionally been held in various outlying stations; but nothing yet has been done towards holding one at Calcutta. Unless the landholders of Bengal speedily take up a more earnest and determined attitude, the Government cannot be blamed if it treats their remonstrances as half-hearted and of small account.

"The only meeting on the subject of the Ilbert Bill reported during the past week was one of the Jaipoor tea planters. This momentary lull is not to be taken as any sign of a cessation of the agitation, which will certainly burst out with redoubled force should the Government proceed with the Bill.

"It is a significant fact that the notification prescribing the ceremonies to be observed on the occasion of the arrival of the Viceroy in Calcutta omits the usual order directing the Calcutta Volunteers to furnish a guard of honour at Government House. It is generally supposed that the omission is due to a belief on the part of the authorities that the Volunteers would refuse to turn out, and it is quite certain that certain companies, when sounded on the subject, did express that intention. In some quarters it is asserted that the feeling in question is by no means general in the regiment. However that may be, it is unquestionably widely spread.

"The state of the weather in Bengal is causing much anxiety. At the date of the last report, the rainfall was about 12 in. below the average. The rice crop throughout the western and central districts has altogether withered, or will yield at best about one-fourth of a full harvest. In Bombay, on the other hand, great damage has been done by an excessive rain fall, lasting three or four days, which came as a surprise upon the ryots, after they had supposed that the monsoon was ended.

"A brutal murder is reported from Bangalore. The victim was a middle-aged European woman, named Maria Burbridge. Her corpse was found lying in the road, and, on examination, it appeared that death was due to laceration of the liver and other internal organs, caused by an exercise of cruelty similar to that which is supposed to have been used in murdering King Edward II. No clue to the murderers has yet been discovered, but it is stated that the deceased was seen on the previous evening drinking with some Mahomedans.

"An interesting discovery has just been made in Calcutta by Mr. Bayne, an engineer in the employment of the East India Railway Company. He has succeeded in identifying the exact site of the historical Black Hole, and has laid bare a portion of its walls. They are in a perfect state of preservation, with the plaster intact on the inner surface. The dimensions of the chamber correspond exactly with those recorded. The excavation has been made just inside the gate in Dalhousie-square, on the north side of the General Post Office, and occupies a portion of what was the north-eastern bastion of the old fort. It has been suggested that a monument to the victims should be erected on the site.

"The Viceregal party reached Batala on Friday, having experienced very cold weather during the journey.

"It is reported that one Maizulla Khan, of the Ghilzai tribe, has been put to death in Turkestan by the Ameer's order, and also that a merchant of Umritsur, suspected of being a spy, has been ordered to leave Cabul."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HINDOO POETRY.

"The Rāmāyana of Tulsi Dās." Translated from the Original Hindi by F. S. Growse, B.C.S., M.A., Oxon, C.I.E., &c. Allahabad, 1883.

We heartily congratulate Mr. Growse on the completion of his great undertaking—the translation of the famous poem of Tulsi Dās. Much as has been said about that extraordinary work, few Europeans have found themselves capable of mastering the intricacies of language and style of the somewhat archaic Hindi in which it is composed. In truth, the difficulties are all but insurmountable; for, in addition to the fact that the poem was composed in the old Hindi of 300 years ago, the author rejoiced in introducing obscure colloquialisms, and never hesitated, furthermore, to do violence to syntax, or to alter the shapes or give new senses to words, merely to suit the exigencies of his rhymes. To a Native, all this is simple enough, because he follows without effort the modifications of a compatriot, who necessarily conforms to the natural harmonies of his mother tongue. The poem is "a joy for ever" to the Hindus of the North West Provinces, on account both of its matter and of its form. In the opinion of Hindus (with the small exception of Sanskrit-knowing Pandits) the work of Tulsi Dās is the finest composition in the world—it is simply perfect; each verse of it is held in reverence exceeding that felt for the Bible by Europeans. It is hardly too much to say that no one can be in sympathetic unison with Hindu people except through the medium of the verses of Tulsi Dās; and this results from the universality with which they are read, recited, and adored. The subject of Rāmā's love, and obedience, and his glorious achievements, is held to be the grandest theme which can engage the attention of man; and the verses of the famous author of the Rāmāyana are esteemed faultless in the way they rehearse these holy deeds. Such being the nature of the book, it is evident that Mr. Growse has rendered an important service to his country by supplying a translation which enables Englishmen to understand what the living Hindus hold to be the book of books. By so doing, he has provided a bond of sympathy between the two races which it should be the great aim of Government to foster and strengthen. When the present harring legislators stay their ill-doing hands, let us hope that the real work of social improvement in India will resume its course, aided by such kindly influences as those made available by the useful labours of Mr. Growse.

The translation itself is faithfully executed, and places Mr. Growse in the first rank of Hindi scholars. He has used his opportunities to good purpose, and has made his translation a work of the first authority. Not only is the book true in substance, but it is also handsome in its noble quarto form, and in the numerous autotype illustrations of places and incidents in the life of the heroic Rāmā. While reading the translation we have been impressed with the need for a standard text; and we hope that Mr. Growse's proved ability and love for the subject will encourage the custodians of the two copies still existing in Tulsi Dās's own handwriting, to permit him to use them for the preparation of such a work. At present the work exists only in manuscript, or in the wretched bazaar-printing or lithographed forms. Mr. Growse has used the edition of Pandit Rāmjasan, a scholar whose many careful works have impressed us favourably. The version we have is that of Sadā Sukh Lal, which has the advantage of a rather full commentary, and which removes some of Mr. Growse's doubts and confirms some of his suggestions. Thus on p. 509, Mr. Growse suggests bar dam-sila for Rāmjasan's barad sustila. In our text bar dam-sila actually occurs; and the comment adds, bar dam-sila—indri ke jītnewālā. On p. 505 Mr. Growse proposes the substitution of manojāt, "mind-born," for manujād, "man-eaters," occurring in his original. Our text confirms his amendment by giving the word manajāt in the passage indicated, and adding by way of comment—manajāt arthāt Kāma-rāpī baheliye ne un log mrig ko jo anāth the kubhog bān hridaya men mārke nipāt kar diyā,—in exact conformity with his explanation of the verse. Again, on p. 449, Mr. Growse translates a suggested giri-sila, in preference to Rāmjasan's jaya-sila, to express the "weapons" which the context requires; but in our text the words are nānā astra sastra gahi dhāye, a third reading. We may add that our text supports the reading chhatāja-nayan of Rāmjasan, remarked on by Mr. Growse in the same page; and the comment explains it by lāl-netra, "blood-shot eyes." With respect to the word mas-ak, on which Mr. Growse annotates on p. 389, the comment on the text we use has the following sensible remark,—mas-ak samān kā arth yah hai ki apne kapi-rāp ko chhotā kari liyā, aur masak kā sabd upamā men parā hai, "the meaning of 'like a gnat' is that he made his monkey-body quite small. The word 'gnat' is used metaphorically." In the glossary given by the same commentator, masak, which usually denotes "a gnat," is explained by massā, "a wart."

It is to be hoped that health and opportunity may be afforded to the able translator to enable him to become the editor of a standard text of the Rāmāyana of Tulsi Dās.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MAJOR BARING AND THE ILBERT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Major Baring, in his article in the Nineteenth Century for October, says with reference to the opposition raised against the Ilbert Bill: "I should be sorry to think that, in order to attract English capital to India, it is necessary to veto any reform having for its object the improvement of the condition of the natives." This is indeed begging the question, seeing that neither Major Baring nor anybody else has shown how the Ilbert Bill would improve the condition of the natives. The Bill provides for subjecting Englishmen to the jurisdiction of an additional number of the Mofussil, or country Criminal Courts, which are well known for the facilities they afford to the admission of false evidence, and the success with which false charges have been established through their decisions. The Bill proposes that a few of these Mofussil Criminal Courts having jurisdiction over Europeans should be presided over by native servants of the Government. If injustice, inflicted through their instrumentality upon their British fellow-subjects, can be looked upon as any advantage to the natives, the animosity against them, which must ensue, would greatly detract from, if not entirely destroy, such advantage.

It has been asserted that the Ilbert Bill forms, together with the Local Self-Government, and the Bengal Tenancy Bills, a consistent policy, for which we are indebted to Lord Ripon. Those who make the assertion apparently forget that the Tenancy Bill was initiated under the previous administration, and was introduced under Lord Ripon, merely because it happened to be matured in his time. Besides, there is no connection whatever between the Local Self-Government Bill, which recognises the right of the natives to control the expenditure of funds raised by local taxation, and the Tenancy Bill, which confiscates their proprietary rights in the soil, in favour of certain middlemen which the Bill would create and endow with powers to rack-rent the land.

It must now be evident that the Ilbert Bill was introduced simultaneously with the Tenancy Bill, for the express purpose of diverting public attention from the latter measure, and exciting race-antagonism, in order to deprive the natives of the sympathy and aid of their British fellow-subjects, which they otherwise would fully have received in resisting the spoliation aimed at by the Tenancy Bill. Public attention has, however, recently awakened to the true character of the latter Bill; and, it is to be hoped, that the influence of public opinion will now be exercised for preventing the injustice contemplated in it.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

THE DEAD CENSURES THE DEAD.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—It is due to the memories of the late Lords Derby and Beaconsfield, of General Peel, and of several other departed statesmen, nay, more it is due to the memory of the Earl of Aberdeen, who is put forth as their accuser to rescue their reputations for honesty, which a letter of the last mentioned Earl, published in the last number of the Edinburgh Review, impeaches. The time and the charge have reference to the now almost forgotten subject of the Repeal of the Corn Laws, and the then raging controversy between Protectionists and the Advocates of Free Trade. The charge, not simply of error of judgment, but of want of honesty, is contained in a private letter written by the Earl of Aberdeen, no doubt in the foolish belief that such confidences are, as they ought to be, kept sacred. All the persons impeached have relatives and friends living (the Empress Eugénie included), whom the strictures of the late Earl upon the dead will grievously afflict and perhaps irritate. A letter marked by all his eloquence and wealthy abundance of words from Mr. Gladstone to Sir Arthur Gordon, the youngest son of the late Earl of Aberdeen, has led to the communication to the public of these which I am forced to treat as posthumous, unjust accusations on men, who, however erroneous their policy at that time may have been, were certainly sincere in their opposition to the Repeal of the Corn Laws. When it is considered that those laws were thought by many of their earliest supporters favourable to the welfare of the many, as likely to increase the growth of corn, and keep its price moderate, that protection of native industries is still in many enlightened countries believed by their rulers to be a wise policy, and that such had been (until a very late period before the change) that of the leaders of the Conservative party, it seems strange that slowness to be convinced of error should be confounded with dishonesty. The only proof of this imputed dishonesty, which the Earl of Aberdeen offers, is as weak as the charge itself. It is that they adopt the principle of protection. In this they acted in conformity with the conduct of every wise and good Statesman in a free country, who bows to a decision of the people respects, obeys, and acts upon it. A very striking instance of this is presented by George III., who said to the first American Ambassador, that as he, the King, had been the last man in the kingdom to assent to the independence of America, so would he be the last man to violate it. Another striking instance may be found in Sir Robert Peel and his declaration after the Reform Bill was passed, that he should in all things conform to the new order of things, though still retaining his declared opinions as to the merits of the late Governments, preceding it. The election consequent on Lord Derby's acceptance of office shows unmistakably that protection was not the belief of the country, and the cessing to revive a dead and profitless controversy after that proof of its decay merely indicated prudent conformity. To blame one party for that which is acquiesced in by another, is not consistent with justice. Mr. Gladstone's letter contains the highest character of Lord Aberdeen that one Statesman can give of another. I am not disposed to question it, but it is to be observed that the time when Lord Aberdeen wrote this letter was a time of angry and excited feeling, and that under such feelings even good men are often unjust, especially when standing forward to defend their friends. The language used as to the late Lord Beaconsfield, that he was the Earl of Derby's "necessity and curse," that used as to the Emperor of the French, charging him in the broadest terms as a hypocrite and a liar, with relation to the very acts which Lord Palmerston had approved as necessary in the then state of France, leads me to think that a wise man would do well to put into private letters as little as possible, and that a calm historian will never, as he ought never to, accept these gossiping garrulities as matter of history.

If Lord Aberdeen were, for instance, to be judged by this letter, and one or two of the same kind, it would be impossible to accept as to him that character of "freedom from suspicion" that Mr. Gladstone gives him. But it is just as sound a way of judging a man by the contents of his hastily scribbled letters to a diplomatist in petticoats, as to judge a writer by his post-prandial opinions as to a novelist or poet of his day.—I have the honour to subscribe myself, Sir, your obedient servant,

LAWRENCE PEEL.

FROM TIPHOOK INTO UPPER BURMAH, TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—During nearly sixty years we have held Assam, and yet have failed hitherto in opening communication with Upper Burma. A good metalled road, sixty miles in length, south-eastward from Tiphook is all that is required. From Seebasgur in Upper Assam to Tiphook is about twenty miles; the latter place lies in North latitude 26 deg. 45 min., and East longitude 94 deg. 45 min. From Tiphook the route is through Chenbang and Langa to the banks of the great Khyendwan River, which waters the fertile plains of Upper Burma on the West, and flows into the Irrawaddi a little above Yandaboo, where our treaty of peace was signed on Feb. 24, 1826.

Our omission to construct this important commercial highway is explained by Captain A. K. Abbott in page 5 of his "Notes on the Naga Hills"; he thinks that the savage Nagas have prevented any peaceable effort to open the route.

In the campaign of 1875 the Eastern Nagas were completely defeated, and the murder of Lieut. Holcombe at Ninu was avenged. The British army penetrated South of Ninu to Nisa and Kamhu, 4,600 feet above the sea, on the East of the Llang river. Further South water was found to be abundant, and our soldiers had marched two marches or twenty miles beyond Kamhu, they would have seen the great Burmah river, the Irrawaddi.

In 1880 a successful campaign was made against the Western or Angami Nagas, but some years must elapse before a good road can be made from Konom or even from Kamhu eastward. For want of a better route the few Nagas go southward through the Munciepor territory, which is highland, and by no means an easy way.

Savages, like the Nagas, are most easily brought to reason by good roads. A Roman road, 100 feet wide, would overawe the savages who lose heart when the jungle is cut down. Captain Abbott's report is as follows:—

"Second route through Seebasgur to Chenbang in the Naga Hills, thence to Langa. Two days' journey, and from thence to Khyendwan River, another two days' journey. But here again the Nagas were hostile."

In sheet 130 of the Indian Atlas, the country through which this road would pass is left entirely blank.—Your obedient servant,

Oct. 29.

Major C. D. P. Payne, wing commander and officiating second in command of the 17th Bombay N.I., is appointed to officiate as second in command of the 16th N.I. during the absence of Lieut. Col. Griffith, on furlough.

Captain Lord Alwyne Compton, of the Viceroy's staff, will join Sir Frederick Roberts's staff temporarily, during the camp of exercise at Bangalore.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

DOCTRINAIRE LIBERALS AND THE ILBERT BILL.

IN India the controversy on the Ilbert Bill has on the whole been happily free from political bias. In England, however, the reverse has been the case. There nothing is more singular than the line adopted by the bulk of the Liberal party with regard to the subject. The opponents of the Bill complain that it abolishes a most important guarantee for the liberties of non-official Englishmen in India, thinly scattered throughout a vast oriental population, whose thoughts and feelings are, for the most part, utterly opposed to their own. These Englishmen contend that the guarantee in question is their birthright, which has been handed down to them from time immemorial, and solemnly confirmed by Magna Charta. Were this right attacked in England, our countrymen would not fail to make themselves heard with effect through their constitutional representatives in Parliament. But here, in India, they unfortunately live under a despotic Government, which can pass any measure it chooses, provided it meets with the approval of the Secretary of State. Such circumstances, one would naturally suppose, ought to call forth the warmest sympathy of the Liberal party, which has always stood forth as the champion of popular rights. But, strange to say, we find its leaders contemptuously rejecting the appeal of his countrymen in India, as being prompted by a spirit of ascendancy, which must be checked at all hazards. Although the proposed measure is practically in the nature of a Disabilities Relief Bill, Liberals in England assume, with generous enthusiasm, to speak out on behalf of 250 millions of their native fellow-subjects, the great majority of whom can derive no possible benefit from it, and neither know nor care anything about it. Leaving aside the arguments based on administrative convenience and respect for native susceptibilities, both of which have already been sufficiently answered, we will first deal with the contention that native and non-English rights are involved in the present case.

The advocates of the Bill assert that it in no way infringes any rights possessed by Englishmen under the Magna Charta, inasmuch as every subject of Her Majesty, without distinction of race, is legally their peer. Parliament, they say, established in 1833 the principle that no native of India by reason only of his religion, place of birth, descent, or colour is disabled from holding any office in the service of Government, and Her Majesty, later on, in 1858, pledged herself to admit, so far as might be, freely and impartially all natives who should be qualified for such offices by education, ability, and integrity. They finally point out that these declarations have been since acted on by the admission of natives to the Covenanted Civil Service by competition. But it should be noted incidentally that all their arguments concern only this particular class of native civilians. Under these circumstances, they contend that the existing law cannot be defended, as, on the one hand, it preserves no right which Englishmen possess, while, on the other, it deprives natives of a right which has been solemnly secured to them by the Supreme Legislature and the Crown. That every subject of Her Majesty, of whatever race, is the peer of an Englishman, we cannot admit. It is one of those purely abstract theories which find favour with political doctrinaires, especially with philosophical or, as we prefer to call them, metaphysical Liberals. These form a political school, which, with the march of progress, is doomed to give place to the younger and more sensible school of scientific liberals, whose policy is happily guided by facts instead of theories. Such a doctrine, if logically carried out, would include Kols, Bheels, Gonds, Todas and other wild tribes of India—a result which would certainly not find favour with the educated natives who are agitating on behalf of the Bill. We have already endeavoured to make clear in a recent article that the measure does not materially infringe the Englishman's rights. We have therefore merely to consider whether the native members of the Covenanted Civil Service on their part possess a superior right which would entitle them to insist upon the Bill being passed. As regards this point, the supporters of the Bill rely very strongly on the fact that the native members of these Covenanted Civil Service, at least, must be deemed fully qualified, in the term of the Queen's Proclamation already referred to, "by education, ability, and integrity." With respect to the first two qualifications, there can be no doubt that the fact of passing the competitive examination must be accepted as a conclusive test. There remains, however, the moral qualification comprised in the term "integrity." It is generally admitted that the native races of India do not, as a rule, possess the same standard of morality that guides the Englishman in Government service. The doctrinaire, however, contends that Native Civilians, who have resided for two or three years in England, must be presumed to have acquired such a moral tone by contact with English life as to thoroughly fit them to exercise the jurisdiction with which it is proposed to invest them. Against this we venture to demur, for an such presumption, in our opinion, is wrong. We do not think that the majority of native candidates, for the comparatively brief period during which they reside in England, mix sufficiently with English society to acquire the moral advantages which are said to be derived from good example, although such contact with Englishmen at home undoubtedly emancipates them from very many of their prejudices.

Nor, indeed, are we prepared to admit that the educational advantages which they enjoy have any very great or abiding influence upon their moral character. That view is based upon the common superstition that the moral character of an individual can be materially changed by education. Such a theory is completely at variance with scientific facts. Education, in its widest sense, may be defined as the art of forming the character and cultivating the mind. But it must be remembered that every human being is the result of a system of evolution carried on by slow degrees for many centuries. Observation teaches us that, in his case, not only the physical formation, but also all modes of mental activity, both as regards intellectual capacity and moral disposition, are transmitted by heredity. As regards morality, Herbert Spencer has observed that the experiences of utility organised and consolidated through all past generations of the human race, have been producing corresponding modifications, which, by continued transmission and accumulation have become in us certain faculties of moral intuition. We are not born with knowledge but with inherited aptitudes or tendencies, and in these lie the differences which we observe in the characters of races. The influence of education upon character cannot be denied, but its limits are far narrower than most people imagine. Powerful factor though it be, it is in constant conflict with other factors which have exercised their influence for ages and are therefore far more powerful. Ignorance has been called the parent of vice and crime, and in support of this doctrine statistics are relied on as showing that the majority of criminals are illiterate. Admitting this fact to be true, experience nevertheless teaches us that a man may possess superior intellect and extensive culture, and yet be a thorough scoundrel. In his case, education merely enables him to select a safer field for his operations. Education can only effectually modify man's moral nature by constant action extending over many generations. In this way only, as Herbert Spencer points out, and not by precept or example, can a moral habit be formed. Education, therefore, is unable in a country to raise the moral standard of inferior races, much less to transform the inherited moral tendencies of the individual in two or three short years. But the arguments we have adduced tell much more heavily against the Statutory Civilian than against the Indian Covenanted Civilian. If a compromise is to be effected on the lines suggested by the Times, namely by confining the jurisdiction to Sessions Judges and District Magistrates only, such a compromise will be bitterly opposed unless the Statutory Civilians are distinctly barred. We have seen already that the Judges in every High Court have protested against bringing this anomalous class within the scope of the Bill. Even the native community regards the new institution with distrust, and the men themselves entering on peculiar terms could scarcely grumble at not being permitted to exercise peculiar privileges. The "test of fitness" cannot be applied to them for many years to come, and before that time it is more than probable that the system of appointment by favour will have fallen through altogether. No sort of compromise is likely to be welcomed in Bengal; but as the compromise suggested would, without involving serious consequences give the Government a convenient loophole of escape from an undignified position, the English community elsewhere would probably be prepared to consider it. The Government should, however, make no further mistake, and the attempt to include Statutory Civilians would leave both sides in the dispute as far from an agreement as they have been ever since last March. There is a wide distinction between the Covenanted and the Statutory Civilian. All that the advocates of the Bill urge in favour of the first can be readily turned against the latter. We have, as we have shown, not much faith in the arguments themselves. But the very distinction seems to afford a tolerably good excuse for settling the matter off-hand.—Times of India.

THE RECENT MISLEADING TELEGRAM.

WE remarked yesterday that the explanation of the recent misleading telegram furnished by the London Secretary of Reuter's Company to the Times, as having been received by him from the company's Simla agent, was not only most unsatisfactory as an attempt at self-exoneration on the part of the latter gentleman, but created a strong presumption that the telegram in question had been improperly manipulated by Reuter's London office. We might have added that the telegram itself as it appears in the published text, is even more grossly misleading than might have been supposed from a consideration of the corrected figures alone.

Before proceeding to examine the explanation, it should be premised that there is nothing to show how far it represents the actual reply sent by Reuter's Simla Agent to Mr. Griffith's inquiry, and how far only Mr. Griffith's view of the substance of that reply, or a portion of it. Mr. Griffith writes to the Times: "From his reply it appears, etc." We need hardly say that it would have been much more satisfactory to the public, and would have placed them in a much better position for apportioning the responsibility for the figures of the telegram between the Simla Agent and the London Office, had the reply of the former been given verbatim.

To turn now to the figures themselves. The telegram, as published, contained three gross errors. The number of opinions against the Bill was stated to be 26. The number of opinions in favour of the Bill was stated to be 114. The total number of opinions received was stated to be 140. All these statements were untrue in fact, and they all departed from the truth to an extent which rendered it prima facie highly improbable that, if made at all by the sender of the telegram, they could have been honestly made.

For the first of these statements, it is now clear, Reuter's Simla Agent was not responsible. The figures telegraphed by him, as representing the number of opinions against the Bill, were, he assures us, not 26, but 205. Thus, not only was the cipher dropped out, but the 5 was converted into 6 in transmission.

For the second untrue statement, Reuter's Simla Agent is admittedly responsible. He has made no attempt whatever to explain it; and this is the first point in which his explanation is unsatisfactory. This omission is sufficiently remarkable, but it is explicable on the supposition that the Simla agent considers himself justified in classifying as in favour of the Bill all opinions in favour of any legislation in the direction of the Bill, however differing from that proposed in the Bill itself. We cannot, indeed, reconcile such an explanation with an unbiased desire to state the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. But it is difficult to fix a limit to the extent to which some men's judgments are capable of being warped by their prepossessions, and when we find Reuter's Simla agent stating categorically that the Lieutenant Governor of the North West Provinces and the Chief Commissioner of Burma approve of the Bill, we are driven to the conclusion that he is capable, under certain circumstances, of confounding black and white. But although it is thus possible that Reuter's Simla agent may, when he sent his reply to Mr. Griffith, have been unconscious of the need for an explanation of the statement that 114 of the opinions were in favour of the Bill, it is wholly impossible that he should not have been keenly sensible of the necessity of explaining the statement that the total number of opinions reviewed was 140. Not only was this statement inconsistent with the truth, but it was incompatible with the explanation which the agent was giving about the substitution of twenty-six for 205. Indeed, under the circumstances, it seems almost incredible that, in his reply to Mr. Griffith, Reuter's Simla agent wholly ignored this question of the false total.

This reminds us that we have been left, and it is difficult not to believe designedly left, in entire darkness as to the origin of this total. Certain conclusions regarding it are, however, inevitable. Either Reuter's Simla agent telegraphed a total, or he did not. If he telegraphed a total, then, assuming the truth of his explanation about the substitution of 26 for 205, and assuming also that he can do a sum in simple addition, that total must have been, not 140, but 319. Now a similar accident to that which converted 205 into 26 may also have converted 319 into some other figure; but the chances are so enormous against the two errors of transmission producing a concordant result, that we may safely assume that, even if the figures 319 also got altered in transmission, they did not get so altered into 140.

If, in short, Reuter's Simla agent telegraphed any total at all, then the figures of the message, as received by Reuter, must have been inconsistent, and, this being the case, it was the duty of Reuter's secretary in London to get the inconsistency cleared up by referring to the Simla agent for the purpose, instead of altering the total so as to suit the rest of the figures received by him.

If, on the other hand, Reuter's Simla agent telegraphed no total whatever, then Reuter's office in London must have invented the total 140. The impropriety of this course might not, indeed, have been so obvious as that of altering the total; for, if no total was telegraphed, there was no patent inconsistency to arouse suspicion. That it was highly improper, the result has, however, sufficiently shown. For its effect was to supply a factitious proof of the accuracy of the items, and thus prevent the possibility of all suspicion of error in transmission.

Now, in either of these cases—whether a discrepant total was received and tampered with by Reuter's London office, or whether no total was received and one was invented by that office—Mr. Griffith must have known perfectly well that there was something for him to explain in the matter; and he must have known, too, that mere justice to his Simla agent, unless that agent transmitted a false total, if not his duty to the public, placed him under an obligation to explain it.

The fact of his having, notwithstanding, ignored the necessity for explaining it, justifies the conclusion that he was unprepared with a satisfactory explanation.

Now we should like to be furnished with the ipsissima verba of the original message as received by Reuter's London office ; a statement of the hour at which it was received, and also of the hour at which it was furnished to the London Press ; and the ipsissima verba of the explanation furnished by Reuter's Simla agent. We should also like to know whether, in editing the telegram for the Press, any outside authority was consulted by Reuter's London office, and, if so, who that authority was. —Englishman.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE Bill to which we alluded in our last was brought in and referred to a Select Committee. It was never, however, destined to pass into law. There was too little interference with the rights of property within its four corners to suit the extreme Radical tendencies which, from this time, began to leaven the Government of Bengal. The matter was therefore sent up to the Government of India with a recommendation that a rent commissioner should be appointed. We are informed, upon the authority of the then secretary to the Government of Bengal, that although "under the influence of the belief that Government was dealing with the subject, disputes have quieted down, there are still everywhere the embers of an unsettled quarrel."

This statement was made in April, 1879; and to prove it, the divisional reports of the previous four years are raked up.

The writer, however, need have gone no further than the materials which were at hand for the administration report of 1879-80 to find that there was a general and growing prosperity, without the slightest idea on the part of the peasantry of Bengal or Behar that Government was stirring in the matter at all. Although primary education have been brought to the ryot's door, and English schools have been scattered broadcast over the country, it is a melancholy fact, that the eloquent words uttered in the council chamber were probably read by one or two educated men outside of Calcutta, and had not the remotest effect upon the masses of the rural community. No belief whatever existed in the minds of the ryots that Government was taking any steps whatever. No such belief exists even to-day amongst any class of the people who do not read newspapers or listen to the National Fund agitators.

The fact of the matter is, that under strong and wise administration the ryots of the Dhakka Division, as well as those of Pubna, were taught that breaking the peace and rioting were offences with which the law could deal. Their keeping quiet was due to no idea of a Rent Bill being contemplated. It was due to the fact, that the executive officers of the Rajshahai and Dhakka divisions were strong and able men. It is very easy now to lose sight of the reason for the disturbances that took place some ten years ago.

The value of land in Bengal has increased by the most rapid strides. The increase was due to reasons which were altogether outside the expenditure of capital or labour on the part of the ryots. The jute presses of Serajganj and Naraingang began to be built, and the demand for jute opened up a field of wealth to the peasantry of the eastern districts of which they had hitherto never dreamt.

In this increase of value the zemindars, not unreasonably, thought they had some claim to share. They enhanced, or tried to enhance rent, and the ryots at once combined, not only to resist enhancement, but to refuse to pay rent at all. The old procedure was carried out, rent suits were instituted all over the country, with the usual results; decrees were taken out, but could not be executed; and then the strong arm of the executive came in and peace was restored. Peace was restored so far back as 1876, and since then things have been going on in their normal fashion. We emphatically deny that in Bengal the embers of an unsettled quarrel exist, unless that state of things can be said to be a cause for quarrel where one man has property and another not.

The ashes of the old fire had almost vanished away. It is quite possible that a very active flame may be fanned from them, if this Bill comes into law, and landlord and tenant are driven at every turning to litigation. As we have all along said, all that was wanted was, to adapt the existing law to the altered circumstances of the country. This was especially desirable when all friction had ceased, and the country had quieted down after a struggle between the zemindars to obtain their share of the increased value of the land, and the ryots to withhold the payment of any rent whatever. Both parties had been taught that physical force and violence were not the proper means by which to attain their end. The introduction of a simplified procedure for realisation of rents actually due, with a clear definition, on the other hand, of the rights of the ryot, was what struck Sir Ashley Eden in 1879 as being desirable. It would have been well for the country had his intention been carried out. The rent question would have been set at rest for many years to come, if not for all time. Both zemindar and ryot would have known their respective positions, and the land would have had rest.

It was, however, not destined to be so. The year after the introduction of the Bill, which would have done much for the country, saw a new state of affairs all over the empire. A general bouleversement of everything that was settled had begun, and the policy which began with confiscating the property of the landed proprietors in Ireland was set on foot. It did its work in Ireland, and now we see the beginning in India of the same line of action.

Sir Ashley Eden's Bill was therefore withdrawn, and a commission was appointed to compile and consolidate the existing law and to draw up a draft Rent Bill. This commission consisted of Messrs. Dampier, Field, Mackenzie, Harrison, O'Kinealy, and Babus Mohini Mohun Roy, Peary Mohun Mookerjee, and Brojendro Kumar Seal. Mr. Harrison ceased to be a member of the commission before its labours came to an end, so the final report was submitted without his signature. This report was dated June 19, 1880. It is upon this report that the present legislation is founded, and we shall, therefore, have a good deal to say on the subject.

No one can dispute the earnestness and pains with which the subject of the land question was taken up by the gentlemen forming the commission. We shall have to differ from the conclusions at which they arrived in many instances. We shall do so, however, with a sense of the great and laborious work the commission has accomplished, in bringing the history of the rent question before the public in a manner which, for clearness and lucidity, has excelled all previous attempts in the same direction.

We have now a body of facts before us upon which to build conclusions, and for the compilation of these facts we have to thank the Rent Commission. To us in India, the results arrived at by the majority of the Commissioners were startling. Most men thought that the Draft Bill submitted by them went a long way on the road to altering and disturbing existing relations.

The little finger, however, of the Bill which is now before the council is thicker than the loins of the measure which was regarded with dread some two years ago. We shall follow the example of Government and take the Bill and report of the Commissioners as our basis. We hope to be able to show how that, under the fostering sun of Radicalism, a Bill which was originally revolutionary enough in its scope has assumed proportions which may well be called Communistic. We shall ask also, upon what data, upon what new information, the change was made. —Englishman, October 3rd.

THE ILBERT BILL—MEETING AT ALLAHABAD.

A MEETING of opponents of the Ilbert Bill was held at the Mayo Hall, Allahabad, on Oct. 4, and was well attended. In the absence of Mr. Howell the chair was occupied by Mr. R. C. Saunders.

The CHAIRMAN, in opening the proceedings, alluded to the unanimity of the European population of India in regarding the measure as entirely unnecessary, and as opposed to their dearest privileges and to the best interests of the country. Whatever the Pioneer might say as to the Bill being carried through with modifications, he (Mr. Saunders) only gave it two months' longer life, for it was bound to be thrown out; Englishmen would never permit themselves to be enslaved, or what was pretty much the same thing, crushed down to the level of the natives. They were determined, whatever happened, not to give in in this matter. The non-officials of India had been terribly neglected and very unfairly treated by Government, and it was now high time that they should assert themselves. The Eurasians, too, had many wrongs to be righted, and every true Englishman should sympathise with them in the many trials and difficulties they had to encounter. (Applause.) Meetings to oppose the Criminal Jurisdiction Bill must be held all over the country, and frequently, until right had triumphed. Agitation was the only weapon that could be used, and it was the only thing that could move Lord Ripon, who was brought up in an atmosphere of agitation, and who rose to eminence by its means. Mr. Saunders, after some further remarks, moved the following resolution:—"That Lord Ripon having, on March 9 last, distinctly pledged himself in Council to give the 'fullest weight and the most deliberate consideration' to official opinions and other representations that might be made against the Ilbert Bill, and such opinions and representations as published being both in weight and number decided in favour of total abandonment, this meeting is of opinion that Lord Ripon's government is now morally bound, and cannot honourably hesitate, to withdraw the Bill." Referring to the official opinions upon the Bill, the speaker observed that they were not, although generally antagonistic to the measure, unfriendly to the natives. They would probably have been more strongly worded if the civilians had had that knowledge of the natives which was possessed by the non-officials who have lived many years in the country. The platform of the opponents to the Bill was friendliness to the natives, but a disbelief in their fitness as yet to judge Europeans justly and accurately.

Mr. KEMP seconded the resolution, and, in doing so, referred particularly to the injustice of home politicians deciding a question of which they could have but the vaguest notions.

The Europeans in India did not, generally speaking, believe very strongly in the friendly professions of natives towards them. The Gladstone party in England were doing their best to make the natives believe that the real power of the country was in native hands. That was a principle which, if carried out, would in time drive Englishmen from the country. It was utterly impossible for Europeans and natives to live here on actual equality, when there were 250 millions against a mere handful, and unless the Government protected them and respected them, English supremacy would be lowered. If the natives were not loyal to Englishmen, they could not be loyal to England. Natives, according to their own lights, were honourable and good enough, but they had not sufficiently advanced to be able to understand the higher motives which prompted Europeans in the actions and relations of life. Speaking for himself, he might say that he did not dislike the natives, but in view of the proposed measure, he feared them on account of the immaturity of their moral education as measured by a European standard. They were mere babes in this respect, and would a wise father attempt to place his elder and experienced sons on an equality with his youngest child in respect of judgment and the proper appreciation of wordly matters? (Applause.)

The CHAIRMAN then moved, "That the object of the proposed measure, as announced in Council, being to secure, in respect to European British subjects, the fair and impartial administration of justice in this country, and to provide for an alleged administrative inconvenience, and it not having been shown that justice in respect to European British subjects is not fairly and impartially administered, or that any administrative inconvenience exists, on this ground also Lord Ripon is bound to withdraw the Bill." He contended that no administrative inconvenience had been proved by the supporters of the Bill, and ridiculed the notion of the Marquis of Hartington backing up the measure, observing that the noble lord did not know a Mussulman from an Hindu. The Secretary of State's influence upon the Indian Government was one of the worst features of England's relationship with India, and this had been amply proved by Lord Hartington's action in regard to the Ilbert Bill. The speaker would allow the natives every one of the claims to which they were entitled under that noble Proclamation of 1858, but would not go further and make the ruled the rulers. (Applause.)

The Rev. Mr. BRENNAN seconded the proposition, and remarked that the cause and reason for the Bill had to be sought for after the effect became visible. Of all places in the world India was the worst for putting forward statements which could not be backed up by facts; but that particular form of indiscretion had been adopted in regard to the Criminal Jurisdiction Bill. No doubt it was a noble idea that all men should be equal in the sight of their rulers, but like many other noble ideas, it was simply an idea and nothing more. Lord Beaconsfield, when Mr. Disraeli, would admit to the franchise in England those only who, by education and training, were able to form a just opinion on subjects they had to decide. At home people were not trusted to vote unless their houses were valued at a certain amount, but here it was taken for granted that all the natives in their mighty numbers might form an overwhelming public opinion. Even depth of pocket was ignored, and the poorest but considered. The great question to be decided was this—were the principles which it was proposed to engraft on the native mind likely to flourish and result in good? The tendency of the present Government in England was to advance at any cost and with a total disregard of the future; they were not content to allow civilisation to go on smoothly and quietly; the child now was supposed to know more than the man. How could we expect natives to be equal with us in matters of which they had just gained a knowledge, but which had formed a part of English life for hundreds of years? He contended that natives in the present state of their existence were incapable of a just conception of right and wrong as between a native and a European. (Applause.) When native servants did not think it robbery to charge their masters exorbitant prices, how could natives judge of the high standard of honour among Europeans. It would be going too far to say that England conquered states solely for their good, although it might be a secondary influence on their action. The first cause had been the desire to spread abroad the power and increase the riches of England. Some short-sighted statesmen, however, did not recognise this fact, and supposed that our dependencies would remain faithful and true, whilst there was developed within them the desire to govern themselves. Unless England took care that those into whom she was instilling these ideas were capable of properly valuing the privileges given them. The day would come when, having received all, they, knowing their own power of numbers, would cast her aside as a mother that knew not how to train up her children, but had put manly thoughts into their mind when they should have been fed with the milk of babies. England refused to give Ireland Home Rule, as the people of that country had proved they could not rule themselves wisely; how then could she give India, who could not rule herself, the power to rule us. (Applause). If a man could not take care of his own, who would venture to commit to his care that which was another's?

Mr. MOREAU proposed:—"That having regard to recent instances in which the Cabinet in England has in deference to the popular wishes, withdrawn from proposed legislation in the British House of Commons, and to the fact that out of the countless millions of people in India not 50,000 of native population can have even heard of the Ilbert Bill, this meeting is of opinion that there is no foundation for the statement that Lord Ripon's Government can or will sustain any loss of prestige whatever by withdrawing the obnoxious measure in deference to the wishes of the whole European population, and nearly all educated native gentlemen in Upper India." He pointed out that Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright had no idea what the natives of India are. They judged the natives by those educated Hindus who were trained in English universities, and who were men of great intelligence and learning.

Mr. DUFFILL seconded the resolution. In speaking of the introduction of the Bill, he said that the Government had been frightened out of their senses by the bleating of a single Bengal sheep, and he compared the action of the Government with that of a contractor who attempted to put up a roof before building the walls of a house. If Lord Ripon's policy were carried out much longer, Englishmen in India would have to clear out bag and baggage to the strains of the Russian National Anthem. (Laughter.) Referring to Mr. Grant Duff's opinion, that if the Bill were withdrawn the government of the country would be handed over to irresponsible persons, the speaker said that only Mr. Grant Duff's ineffable conceit could have promoted him, after a few months' experience of the country, to set his opinion in such a dogmatic manner against that of men who had lived a lifetime in the country. Mr. Grant Duff considered himself so wise that he thought it was sufficient for him to dispose of the whole matter in a single sentence, and that the mere sound of his voice should calm the agitation. But he would never succeed so long as the Anglo-Saxon race possessed the spirit of ascendancy of which Mr. Gladstone had spoken so disparagingly. (Applause.) That a Government which professed to be the most liberal and enlightened of the age should show such contempt for public opinion was a far greater anomaly than that which they were so eager to remove. They listened to the voice of public opinion in England, and in deference to it cast away the Canal Bill and their own Criminal Procedure Bill. Mr. Grant Duff said that because there was agitation what was agitated for should not be granted. Why, the life-boatmen might as well say that they would not go to the assistance of a wrecked vessel because she had hoisted signals of distress. What would they think of a fire brigade captain who, when told of a fire, said, "If you had not told me I would have come and put it out?" (Applause.) But that was the attitude of Mr. Grant Duff. Mr. Gladstone, when he spoke of crushing the spirit of ascendancy of his countrymen, must have forgotten the history of his country. It was that ascendancy that made him Prime Minister, and kept him in the post. (Applause.) Nation after nation had tried to crush that ascendancy out of Englishmen and had failed. The French tried to crush it out of Nelson at Trafalgar, and out of Wellington at Waterloo, and their efforts ended in defeat and humiliation. This ascendancy was not an evil spirit, but had done much wherever it existed to improve and elevate the people. (Applause.)

The CHAIRMAN then proposed, "that while regretting that the opinions of officials and other competent natives and Europeans in these provinces have not been more numerous and faithfully sought for by Government (it being beyond all doubt that the number and weight of such opinions, even of educated native gentlemen in these provinces, would have largely added to the crushing majority against the Bill), this meeting desires to tender its heartfelt thanks to those European and Native officials and non-officials who have urged the absolute abandonment of the Bill."

Mr. BROWN seconded the motion, which, like the former resolution, was carried unanimously.

Three cheers were then given for Mr. Rivers Thompson and the Defence Association, and "God Save the Queen" having been sung, the meeting separated.—Pioneer.

THE "MORNING POST" ON THE ILBERT MEETINGS OF THE PAST WEEK.

THE eloquent and exhaustive speech on the Ilbert Bill, by Mr. Piunket, on Thursday night, at a meeting of the Earl's-court Conservative Club, places the controversy on this miserable blunder of the Government in a perfectly clear and comprehensible light. That any supporters of this ill-omened measure have been found in this country is due, first, to the strength of Ministerial partisanship, second, to an almost absolute ignorance of the real facts of the case. There are only two good reasons for believing that Ministers deliberately planned to keep the public in the dark regarding the opinion of the Bill entertained by the English community in India. When the debate in the Indian Council on Lord Ripon's scheme for the substitution of native for English judges throughout the dependency was sent over here by telegram, the message was supposed to belong to the class ordinarily despatched by Reuter. The consensus of opinion in the Council seemed to be strongly in favour of the Bill; but later non-official despatches showed that exactly the opposite was the case—that the opinions expressed adverse to the Bill had been deliberately suppressed. Later on, it transpired that the Government had authorised and paid for this false and misleading telegram. What other conclusion can reasonable men come to from this than that a mean attempt was thus made by the Indian authorities to practice a fraud on public opinion in this country? The Government asked the Anglo-Indian community to state their views on the proposals contained in the Ilbert Bill. The result was exactly opposite to that expected by the Government, who thereupon attempted to conceal the fact by means of a falsely-worded telegram. Every one knows that such conduct in private life would be stigmatised as it deserves; is it one whit less disgraceful because the Government are the misdoers? Nemesis has followed Ministers, however, more speedily than they expected. The Bill itself, and the double-dealing and sharp practice that were unscrupulously employed on its behalf, have aroused the strongest indignation, both in this country and amongst the Anglo-Indian community. The vast majority of English opinion, both in this country and in the Dependency, has declared against the measure. The only place where it excited even a feeble measure of approbation was in the Bombay Province, where its practical effects would be hardly appreciable. In Bengal, however, forty-five Europeans and thirteen natives advocated a withdrawal of the Bill, while on the other hand nineteen natives and an American missionary supported it. Taking the whole of the Indian official opinions sent in upon the measure, it appears that thirteen Europeans expressed themselves as favourable to Mr. Ilbert's scheme, while thirty-six were desirous of securing a compromise, and 173 for its absolute withdrawal. These figures are unquestionably trustworthy, and they show with startling clearness how mad and criminal is the course in which the Government appear resolved to persevere.

That there is no real and immediate demand for the proposed enlargement of the jurisdiction of the Indian judges Mr. Plunket had no difficulty in showing last night. The High Court of Bengal declared emphatically that the Ilbert Bill "is justified by no necessity, either immediately present or sufficiently near at hand to require consideration; and that the measure cannot be defended as contributing to the more effectual and impartial administration of justice." For it must be borne in mind that there is not even the pretence that the natives are the victims of injustice at the hands of the English judge. The supposed grievance which is said to call for and justify Lord Ripon's fantastic measure exists nowhere save in the imaginations of the Viceroy, Mr. Ilbert, and a few other sentimental persons. It must be admitted, no doubt, that within the last few months the situation has changed somewhat in this respect. Foolish agitators and writers have taught the Indian people to believe that unless the Indian Criminal Procedure Bill is passed, their just interests will suffer. When that measure is withdrawn or rejected—as it surely will be in the end—there will naturally be a certain effervescence of popular feeling on the subject, for which Her Majesty's present advisers will be solely and culpably responsible. But the artificial grievance created by the folly and short-sightedness of the Indian Viceroy is no genuine grievance at all. As we have said, the Indian public generally do no suffer at all—in truth they gain a great deal—by the exclusive jurisdiction exercised in the provinces by English judges. The few natives who are thus shut out from judicial office—Lord Ripon himself computes them at only half-a-dozen for the next few years, and at no more than one-sixth of the whole number of judges when the Ilbert system should have got in full working order—represent so small an infraction of right as to be scarcely worth mention. The fact of the matter is that the Indian Criminal Procedure question is an English infinitely more than it is a native concern. The natives suffer no injustice from having all their quarrels with Europeans settled by English judges, while, on the other hand, Europeans would be sure to suffer the grossest injustice if they had to plead their cause against native wrongdoers before native judges. That they do not now suffer in this way because there are in certain districts native judges with jurisdiction over white men, is readily explained by the fact that in these districts the European element largely preponderates. But in the more distant provinces, where Englishmen are in the smallest of minorities, the situation is exactly reversed, and if to existing disadvantages were added that of being tried by a native judge, the life of Europeans would become simply intolerable. The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal stated, in reply to the question addressed to him by Lord Ripon, that "an Englishman, much more an Englishwoman, summoned to a native magistrate's court (frequently as evidence shows, on a false charge), has to undergo many indignities which a European officer can at once control and check, but which, in a court presided over by a native, find free course among a sympathetic audience. There is no exaggeration in this as most persons who have had to deal with such cases can testify, and the absolute distrust which the European in the interior has of such courts arises not so much from any positive want of confidence in the magistrate, if left to himself, as from the atmosphere of perjury, forgery, and intrigue which is about him and around him." This is only an example of the sort of evidence which has poured in upon Lord Ripon almost daily since he invited those in India best qualified to speak to frankly state their views on the Ilbert Bill and its probable consequences. To all appearance the overwhelming tide of opinion adverse to the measure, has not altered Lord Ripon's determination to secure its final sanction by the Indian Legislature. But the people of this country will not regard so scandalous a proceeding with indifference. There must be no mistake on this point. The Ilbert Bill is not called for by circumstances; if it became law it would do the native community no real good, while it would work the European community infinite harm. Therefore, it must not be allowed to be written on the statute book under any circumstances whatever.

THE SAME.

THE meetings to consider the Ilbert Bill which took place last week afford welcome evidence that people in England at length begin to realise how serious are the issues involved. Until this matter is settled, either for good or for evil, it can scarcely be even momentarily dismissed from our attention. With the speech of Mr. Plunket we have already dealt. It remains for the politicians of whose conduct it forms so searching an indictment to lay before the country some equally public refutation. Meanwhile we desire to call attention to the significance possessed by such a meeting as that held under the auspices of the Balloon Society on Friday night at the Aquarium. There was nothing of an ex parte nature in the evidence laid before it. Speeches were made on both sides, and many native gentlemen, headed by the Rajah Kampil Sing, were present with every opportunity for stating their views of the case. But out of the multitude of words uttered he would be a clever man who could disentangle one coherent argument in favour of the measure. We say this advisedly, and, in fact, were this merely a matter out of which political capital could be made such a circumstance would be a positive disadvantage. It is easy to attract sympathy by assailing imperfect arguments. It is difficult to keep on repeating a condemnation which no one seems able to reply to. It will be well to take a few examples of the statements made on either side, and let them speak for themselves. It is argued by the supporters of the Bill that in the three capitals Englishmen are actually under native jurisdiction, and therefore that the principle of the Bill is already granted. Assuming this for a moment to be a common event, the difference is still sufficiently obvious. Large numbers of Europeans are massed together in the towns, and are protected by a competent press and its accompanying publicity from any suspicion of foul play. Could this be said of residents in some out-of-the-way part when brought by some native accuser before a native judge? The native judge might be a most estimable person according to his lights, but he would be more than human were he, when removed from the fierce light of public opinion, to administer impartially the alien laws of an alien race as against his own countrymen. Thus this proposition seems theoretically quite untenable, in spite of its specious sound. But when we come to consider what is actually meant so far by the argument that existing native magistrates already try Englishmen in the cities we reach the ludicrous. The editor of the Calcutta Daily News stated that within the last quarter of a century three natives only had received such appointments in that city, two of whom were subsequently dismissed for falsifying judicial records. And this passed uncontradicted in a meeting including, as we have said, both English and Indian supporters of the Ilbert Bill. A second argument urged was that the language of the Queen's Proclamation had committed us to the proposed course. This was at once rebutted by the observation that the removal of disqualifications was only promised with certain conditions as to fitness. That this is more than a mere platitude is shown by the analogous case of promotion in the army. The natives, although assigned company rank, are not considered fitting persons to receive a company. In face of this custom, the proclamation must not be interpreted as having overlooked the certain necessity for making similar differences in the civil service. It is almost a waste of time to answer high-flown remarks about the Indian nation and the efforts of Lord Ripon to do his best in troubled times. The times were not troubled until his untimeliness made them so. The nation, as a united whole, is, as Mr. Plunket said, our own creation, and without us would resolve itself again into discordant elements. Beyond these, however, we can recall no further suggestions in favour of the Ilbert Bill. It is evident, when this sort of talk is all that we are confronted with, that we can trust implicitly to the strength of our case, and have no need to bolster it up by the introduction of acrimonious side-issues. We are free to confess that several things have been said in opposing this measure which we deprecate as generally at variance with our recognised policy in India, and as particularly tending to obscure the present question. The references to conquest and religion, with which some speakers have garnished their remarks, have been singularly unfortunate. We hold India by the sword, no doubt, but to the generation of our fellow-subjects now growing up there it has been a sheathed sword, and common sense should forbid us needlessly to braodish it at them. We may, in fact, we must, have our own views as to the proper respect due to a cow, but we have learnt one bitter lesson of trying to rule India without regard to religious prejudices. We have now to discuss certain social differences which unfit the native to administer law to the Englishman. The question of religion does not enter into it, and if it did all our dealings with the natives are conducted on the basis of reverence for their religious feelings; and directly they cease to be so we may prepare for a second and, if possible, more horrible Mutiny. Exhibitions of religious zeal, however well intentioned, may with advantage be excluded from the subject, if not because they are unpatriotic, at least because they are irrelevant. In the end too, they would increase, as much as the Ilbert Bill itself, those class animosities which it is our paramount object to allay. Every fresh report from India seems to justify us more and more in our opposition to Lord Ripon's policy. There is, indeed, a mass of evidence which has hardly been brought to light. The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal has said that "Be it privilege or prejudice which the Englishman asserts here, there can be no question that the bare proposal to withdraw it has excited a fiercer and more perilous conflict of races than was witnessed after the Mutiny of 1857." These words are already receiving a terrible fulfilment. The letter of Mr. Ponsonby Moore, which we lately published, affords direct evidence of cases where the name of the Englishman has begun to lose its power. Formerly the ladies of an English family were considered as safe in the protection of native servants as they would be over here. Now more than one horrible case of outrage, too gross for description, but the proofs of which were furnished us with the letter referred to, forms a ghastly commentary on the altered state of affairs. In the face of this evil, can any question more imperatively demand an answer than that which asks why this Bill is pressed forward? It cannot be because Liberal traditions demand that natives be placed on an equal footing with Englishmen, for such traditions are the first to insist that free institutions can only be granted to people prepared to receive them. It cannot be that public opinion requires it, for in India it does not exist, and in England it is unmistakably antagonistic. It cannot be that a great boon will be conferred on the natives by it, for in the course of some years six alone can be benefited by it. Until then, some one tells us why, we must give our own answer. Lord Ripon was sent out by a Government which announced itself as practically infallible. As a conscientious man he may tremble at the tempest he has raised, but as a Liberal Viceroy he trembles still more to confess his error. If this is not true, what is the truth? If it is, can we afford to risk our Empire to save Lord Ripon's dignity? In one scale are the lives of our men, the honour of our women, the happiness of India. In the other the vanity of a few baboos and the fads of a worthy but fatuous nobleman.

MEDICAL WOMEN FOR INDIA.

A MEETING to further the movement for introducing medical women into India was held on Monday afternoon, in the rooms of the Social Science Association, Adam-street, Adelphi. There was a large attendance of ladies, and considerable interest was manifested in the proceedings. Surgeon-General HUNTER, M.D., F.R.C.P., presided.

Mr. KITTREDGE, of Bombay, who was called upon to explain what had been done in India in the way of introducing medical women, said that his intention was first called to the subject by an article written by Mrs. Hoggan and published in a magazine. It occurred to him that something might be done if he could persuade his native friends to open a guarantee fund, so that ladies might be induced to go there from this country, and, when there, to find sufficient remuneration for their labour. In a fortnight he secured from 40,000 to 50,000 rupees as a guarantee, and Mr. Cama, of Poonah, supplemented the amount by £12,000 towards the cost of erecting an hospital for women and children in Bombay, on the understanding that the Government would carry it on and meet all the expenses afterwards. The services of Miss Peachey had been secured, and it was proposed to place the hospital under her charge. The objection now raised by native women against being attended by male surgeons would be at once removed. Women would also be allowed to act as apothecaries, and the University had consented to allow them to enter their classes on the same footing as men, and to obtain a medical education there. The introduction of women as medical officers would tend greatly to alleviate the suffering which existed in India.

Miss MANNING, the secretary, read a letter from Lady M. Hobart, of Bath, who stated that the sad condition to which women in India had been subjected, in consequence of their having no proper medical care, proved the urgency of the need; and the opening for work for medical men which that need created, seemed as if the response which it had received must eventually prove successful in every respect; and though the guarantee fund had been liberally supported in the outset, she felt very anxious that the committee should make a determined effort to secure remuneration on such a scale as to ensure an endowment to medical women whose capabilities would be above the average. She fancied that, if it were well managed, the native gentlewomen would delight in showing that they individually encouraged such a valuable movement.

Dr. FRANÇOIS HOGGAN moved "That this meeting hears with satisfaction of the opening to women of the Calcutta Medical College and other places for facilitating the medical training of women in India." Mrs. Hoggan said that the most important part of the movement was that of having native women educated cheaply in their own country; for then they would be of immense use amongst the millions of Indian women who suffered terribly from the want of proper medical advice, and who, generally speaking, were averse to being attended by those of the opposite sex.

Dr. FRANÇOIS, formerly principal of the Calcutta Medical College, in seconding the motion, said it was exceedingly gratifying to find that many ladies were ready to go to India, and that others were there who were anxious for a medical education to be imparted to them. The development of the native element would prove of incalculable value. He would leave it to the native gentlemen to select their protégées, then to educate them up to a required standard, and afterwards to let them go back to their villages, where they could practise amongst the women. When their skill became known, and they were found to be vastly superior to the wretched nurses, their services would be hailed with delight. Many a poor woman was left to die simply because her nurse, when her case became difficult, told her it was her fate to die, and she must leave her to her own resources. Those women knew very little, except to block up windows and doors, exclude the air, and invoke fanciful deities.

Miss BETLBY, who was the first to establish a hospital for native women in Lucknow, said that much misery existed, simply because there were no medical women to be had.

Dr. LEITNER said that if qualified English ladies went out, he had not the slightest doubt of their being successful amongst the native women.

The motion was carried unanimously.

Mrs. GARRETT-ANDERSON proposed another resolution calling for guarantee funds to be raised in other parts of India.

Miss ANDERSON spoke of the pleasure with which she had heard of the success of the movement in Bombay, and expressed the hope that it would be extended to all parts of the Empire. She had heard ladies talk of the difficulty which must beset those who attempted to doctor women in India, but she thought if women were properly qualified, they could battle quite as well there as in London, where there was a less chance of incompetent persons being found out. Compared with many doctors in London, she had, she must say, the greatest respect for the country professionals, because they had to rely more upon their own knowledge and their power to adapt it. There was no doubt a large field in India for competent medical women, and she heartily wished the movement every success.

Mr. WOOD, of Bombay, and other gentlemen, supported the motion, which was unanimously adopted, and the meeting concluded with a cordial vote of thanks to the chairman.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

(From the Bombay Gazette of Oct. 12.)

The order posting Major General H.R.H. Arthur William Patrick Albert, Duke of Connaught and Strathearn, K.G., &c., to the Meerut Division, appears in general orders dated Sept. 29.

Major General M. Dillon, it is stated, is to come back to India, in all probability succeeding General Payn at Madras, whose tenure in that divisional command expires next April.

Colonel Chapman, the Commander in Chief's Military Secretary, having obtained an extension of three months' leave, making nine in all, should lose his appointment; but, of course, as it is a personal one he could always be re-appointed. The rules as regards leave for officers of the British Service holding staff appointments in this country are six months on medical certificate, with half staff or four months on private affairs on English pay, neither of which can be availed of more than once during the five years' tour with retention of appointment. Even should Colonel Chapman be re-appointed, the Pay Department, it is presumed, will strike him off their pay list for the three months at any rate. It is a nice point.

Col. T. W. W. Pierce, Commandant Bombay 16th N.I., has been granted a good-service pension. Col. Pierce served in Rajputana in 1854-55, Central India in 1858-59, China in 1860, Abyssinia in 1867-68, and Southern Afghanistan in 1880. It was Col. Pierce who, in the latter campaign, commanded the Kach garrison which bravely repulsed a determined attack made by a body of Marris and Ghazis.

Lieut. Col. Robinson, 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade, is spoken of as the probable successor of Lieut. Col. Cunningham, in the appointment of assistant adjutant general of the Northern Division Bombay Army.

Surgeon Thompson officiates for Surgeon Major Kiernander in medical charge of the 16th N.I.

The 5th Bombay Lancers go to Quetta.

A detachment of the 4th Ghorkhas has been detailed for duty, to meet His Excellency the Viceroy at Jummoo, on the 17th instant.

No vessel of the Indian Marine can be placed at the disposal of the Commander in Chief, and a Calcutta paper says that a British India steamer will be chartered to convey His Excellency and staff to Madras and back. The party of His Excellency to visit the camp of exercise at Bangalore will consist of about forty officers, and they will have with them some sixty horses; so that a special steamer would seem to be a necessity.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—A district court-martial, under the presidency of Lieutenant Colonel B. W. Broughton, Madras Staff Corps, assembled at the court-martial room, Bellary, on the 24th ultimo, for the trial of Private William Stevens, of the 2nd Battalion Royal Fusiliers, who was charged with assaulting Lance Corporal William Greaves, the Orderly Room Sergeant. Greaves, hearing a disturbance in the barrack-room, on Sept. 15, proceeded to the spot, and there found the accused, who was drunk, creating a disturbance, which led the corporal to order an escort to march him to the guard room. The accused turned round towards the corporal and said, "Am I for the guard room, Corporal Greaves?" to which the latter replied in the affirmative. The accused made a rush at Greaves, and struck him with his clenched fist across the chest, at the same time exclaiming: "Well, I'll go to the guard-room for something." The court found the prisoner guilty of the charge, and sentenced him to be rigorously imprisoned for one year.—Gunner Harry Smith, Q Battery, 1st Brigade, Royal Artillery, was tried by general court-martial at Madras, on Sept. 11, for having enlisted without declaring that he had previously been discharged with ignominy from the 1st Battalion Lincolnshire Regiment, in which he served under the name of Harry Sturgess. He was found guilty, and sentenced to penal servitude for five years and to be discharged with ignominy.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1883.

THE ILBERT BILL AND MR. ATKINS'S MEETING AT THE AQUARIUM.

We believe that most of our readers are following, with interest and sympathy, the mission to this country of Mr. F. T. Atkins, the delegate of the railway employes and other English working-men of India. With the sturdy independence characteristic of the English working-men, especially of those who have been much employed abroad—the manly, self-reliant spirit to which the British Empire owes so much, both in the Colonies and in India—Mr. Atkins has neither sought nor received in his really formidable undertaking the aid of the London Committee formed to protest against the Ilbert Bill. But if any members of that Committee were ever inclined to doubt whether their sympathy might unreservedly be given to one who, on somewhat different lines, and in a different stratum of society, is working with the same object—that of letting the English people know the truth about the Ilbert Bill—we are sure that their doubts will now have been set at rest, not merely by the unquestionable success of Mr. Atkins's appeal to the working-men of London at the Aquarium last Friday, but also by the general moderation of his address on that occasion.

First, as to the success of the meeting. No one who was present at the Aquarium could doubt it for a moment. The presence of a noisy band of Radicals, led by such wild spirits as Mr. Kelly, of Clerkenwell, Mr. Haggard, of Serampore fame, Dr. G. B. Clark, of the Transvaal Independence Committee, and Mr. Martin Wood, only served—like the twenty-three Radicals who disturbed the Limehouse meeting in August last—to accentuate the strength and reality of the public feeling against the Bill. Lest this view of Friday's meeting should be thought to be coloured by the wishes of a writer hostile to the Bill, we will quote the description of one of the very ablest supporters of the Bill, the Western Morning News—a journal often cited by us as representing the most dangerous (because at once the most cultured and the most sincere) opposition to the views of those who desire, with ourselves, the withdrawal of the measure: The London correspondent of the Western Morning News thus wrote last Saturday :—

"Lord Kimberley should take the meeting of the Balloon Society last night for a sign. It was not a party or a packed meeting, yet its condemnation of the Ilbert Bill was unmistakable; and I know from what I hear about me that the agitation is telling with greater force than the friends of the measure seem to imagine. The question 'How would you like your wife to be tried by a Hindoo who regard women as so many cattle?' is coming home to the working-men; and they want to know what Lord Ripon's ideas of equality between races are that he should subject Englishmen to a subject race. The opponents of the measure are enthusiastic, relentless, fierce, and they have practically the whole Anglo-Indian opinion behind them. I understand that the measure is to be passed in any case, but its postponement is creating a feeling which will be fatal to its success as a pacifying measure tending to greater equality. Lord Kimberley may be assured, therefore, that, unless he is prepared to pass the measure at once, he will presently be unable to pass it at all."

The writer of this paragraph, as a strong Liberal, is evidently, and not unnaturally, prejudiced in favour of what he fancies to be "a pacifying measure tending to greater equality," introduced into India by a Liberal Viceroy. But as an honest man—and also as a sound politician, for in the long run honesty is the best policy—he dares to face actual facts; and those facts are, that the solid, sober, truthful grounds on which Anglo-Indians have been led into "fierce" opposition to this ill-timed measure, are really sinking down into the minds of the English people.

Next, as to the moderation of Mr. Atkins's address to the working-men at the Aquarium. A perusal of the report will show that he based his appeal solely on the fears—admitted even by Sir Steuart Bayley to be well founded—and on the just susceptibilities, of the poorer and less cultivated classes of the English in India, the English working men and women. It may freely be admitted that, in representing those fears to the working classes of England, he had to speak of the religious customs of Hindus as they appear to the view, necessarily somewhat superficial and exoteric, of the less educated classes of Englishmen in India. An Englishman, who is also a Sanskritist and a philosopher, can, and does take an esoteric view of the Hindu veneration for the sacred cow, which is to him (as to the highly-educated Hindu) an emblem, an outward and visible sign of something inward and spiritual. As a scholar, he can and does entirely forgive the Hindu religion for that veneration; which nevertheless undoubtedly is, to a less educated Englishman, unintelligible and even repulsive—especially when it is forcibly contrasted with the lack of veneration for women, which is frankly acknowledged by all Hindu gentlemen of enlightenment to be the weakest point of the Indian social system. There is, in the whole of Mr. Atkins's address, so far as we can see, only this one sentence, to which objection can justly be made by any one; and since Mr. Atkins does not profess to speak as a scholar, or as a philosopher, but only as a plain working-man, truthfully, to represent the feelings and the reasonable prejudices of English working men and women, we do not think he can be blamed for mentioning a prejudice which (whatever weight may be attached to it by scholars), is undoubtedly an important fact, that cannot and ought not to be ignored.

The blame should rather be laid on that foolish and misguided ruler, who has forced such prejudices, on both sides, into a most unfortunate and most unnecessary prominence.

We will at once say, frankly, that we should be the very first fiercely to condemn any reference to religious feelings on either side, where such references were made for purposes of attack. But Mr. Atkins's unhappy clients are the attacked parties—attacked most gratuitously by the Viceroy; and Mr. Atkins is forced, by the very nature of the case, to state fully all the grounds (including, as we have said, some that would not weigh much with scholars) on which the English working men and women in India do most undoubtedly dread the criminal jurisdiction of any but their own countrymen. The folly of Lord Ripon has forced the Hindu magistrate into an aggressive attitude to his English neighbours and fellow-subjects, entirely foreign and uncongenial to the tolerant Hindu mind—an attitude which, we can only trust, will soon be felt by them to be as intolerable to themselves, as it is undoubtedly distressing to their true English friends. As Mr. Plunket eloquently observed last Thursday:—

"It is obvious that no native candidate for judicial honours need ever really lose the enjoyment of all the income and substantial advantages of these appointments, if the law remains as it is. And I for one rejoice to think that it is so; for I desire that full effect should be given to the policy of admitting natives to office wherever it can be safely and properly done. But if the native aspirant insists that he will not be satisfied with all the dignity and emoluments of these judicial offices unless he is further guerdoned by this trophy, which 'not enriches him, but makes the Englishman poor indeed,' then he forces me into an entirely different attitude, and I answer in the language of the Judges—'Nay; this right to be judged by his peers is the privilege not of the magistrate but of the prisoner.'"

The tone of Mr. Atkins's address throughout is, as it should be, entirely defensive. He rightly deprecates all idea of retaliating on those, who are not really the foes of his class, but who are only forced to appear as such by the reckless incompetence of the Viceroy. He shows how that, even in his own society, that of the railway servants of India, the right hand of fellowship has been spontaneously held out to their native fellow-workmen by the English employés; and how that very solid and tangible advantages have been secured to the former, in this way. This is as it should be. This is the way in which the different nationalities of the great Indian Empire must be welded into one harmonious whole—and not by persecuting enactments like the Ilbert Bill, which "leaves the Englishman poor indeed," merely to gratify the grudging feeling of envy and intolerance, which Lord Ripon falsely supposes to animate the native breast.

In the discussion which followed Mr. Atkins's address nothing could be more instructive than the contrast between the speech of Mr. Dawson, brimful of affectionate regard for the truest interests of the Natives of India, and that of Mr. Haggard, which consisted of little else than virulent abuse of Anglo-Indians, conceived in the old "damn-the-legality" style which obtained some notoriety for this young gentleman when he was an assistant magistrate at Serampore. Mr. Wilson, of the Indian Daily News, tickled the audience immensely when he recalled the almost-forgotten incidents of the occasion, when Mr. Haggard earned the soubriquet by which he is best known to Bengalis; and it is somewhat amusing to note that the Hindoo Patriot received by the last mail, in the course of a glowing eulogium on Mr.

Haggard's support of the Ilbert Bill, is obliged to fall back on this familiar nickname, in order to recall the personality of the writer to the minds of the good people of Calcutta and Serampore. This is what the Hindoo Patriot says:—

"The next article we will notice is equally worthy of attention. It appears in the last number of the Contemporary Review under the head of "Europeans and Natives in India" from the pen of Mr. A. H. Haggard. This article is nobly conceived. The author is an ex-member of the Bengal Civil Service. He was, the reader might recollect, the magistrate of Serampore, with whom we had many a tussle for his 'damn-the-legality' doctrine."

The reader has probably recollected the fact with a genial smile.

Dr. G. B. Clark, the worthy chairman of the British Indian "Reform" Committee, contributed to the amusement of the Aquarium meeting by supporting the Ilbert Bill on "economic grounds." The British workman can hardly be expected to appreciate at a moment's notice even the finest instance of a bathos; but the sharpness of the descent from the great fears and sorrows of a considerable English community, to Dr. Clark's "economic grounds," was so tremendous, that the whole audience rose to it, and literally shouted with laughter. And among the Native gentlemen, who mustered strong on the occasion, not a little merriment was further caused by Dr. Clark's very funny pronunciation of the Indian names, on which he somewhat imprudently ventured. That he should have turned one of Mr. Gupta's names, Behari, into Berry, was quite excusable; but seeing that Dr. Clark's own Committee contains at least one Mr. Daita or Dutt, it seems hard on Mr. R. C. Dutt that he should be called Doot by such an authority on Indian affairs as the chairman of an Indian Reform Association. But "Mr. Doot" is a fair sample of the good Doctor's speech.

HOME NEWS.

MAJOR-GENERAL DILLON.—Major-General Martin Dillon, C.B., C.S.I., who recently completed his term of office, as assistant military secretary to the Commander in Chief, is designated for a command in India at an early date, and it is probable that he will succeed to the command of the brigade at Bangalore, which will shortly be vacant by the retirement of General Pain. General Dillon in addition to exceptional experience as a military official, has also seen a great deal of active service. He was appointed an ensign in the 98th at the time of the first Chinese war, when that regiment was commanded by Colin Campbell. He served throughout the Punjab campaign of 1848-9, and also in the frontier war of 1850. In the Mutiny he was brigade major to the Oude field force from 1858 to 1860, and was severely wounded in the battle of Cawnpore, for which he was mentioned in despatches. In the second Chinese war of 1860 he acted as assistant adjutant-general, was present at the capture of the Taku forts, and was mentioned several times in despatches. He was Military Secretary in Bombay from 1865 to 1869, but accompanied Lord Napier of Magdala to Abyssinia in the same capacity in the year 1868. For his services there he was made Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, an honour which he only resigned on his appointment to his recent post at the Horse Guards, in 1878. General Dillon has always been remarkable not merely for his assiduity and his devotion to his profession, but also for his uniform courtesy towards all with whom he came into contact officially, whether in Pall-mall or on the staff of his old chief, Lord Napier of Magdala.

H. M.'S TROOPSHIPS.—The recent order for the use of the Suez Canal by the Indian troopships in their voyage between Portsmouth and Bombay, instead of the route by way of the Cape, has led to a revision of the original programme. The following are the amended dates:—Outward—Malabar, leave Portsmouth Dec. 7, arriving at Bombay Jan. 7; Euphrates, Dec. 19—Jan. 16; Jumna, Dec. 29—Jan. 26; Serapis, Jan. 10—Feb. 7; Malabar, Feb. 24—March 23; Euphrates, March 5—April 2. Homeward—Malabar, leave Bombay Oct. 31, arriving at Portsmouth Nov. 27; Euphrates, Nov. 10—Dec. 7; Jumna, Nov. 21—Dec. 18; Serapis, Dec. 1—Dec. 28; Malabar, Jan. 17—Feb. 13; Euphrates, Jan. 27—Feb. 23; Jumna, Feb. 6—March 4; Serapis, Feb. 17—March 15; Malabar, April 3—April 30; Euphrates, April 13—May 10. None of the transports will call at Malta on the homeward voyage if quarantine is in force.

OBITUARY.—Colonel T. R. H. Drummond-Hay, late of the 78th and 42nd Highlanders, died on Oct. 24, at New Hall, Penny-cuik, Midlothian, at the age of sixty-two. He served in the Persian war of 1857 with the 78th and 42nd Highlanders, and received the brevet of major and the medal with clasp. During the Indian Mutiny campaign he served in Bengal in the several actions leading to and ending in the relief of the Residency at Lucknow, and also served with Outram's force at Alumbagh, including the operations ending in the final capture of Lucknow. Colonel Drummond-Hay, who took part in the Rohilkund campaign in 1858 and in the capture of Bareilly, received the medal with clasp, the brevet of lieutenant-colonel (January 29, 1861), and a year's service for Lucknow.

INDIAN TEA.—From Messrs. Wm. Jas. and Henry Thompson's fortnightly circular:—"The auctions during the fortnight have comprised a total of 41,000 packages. Upon the whole the sales have passed with fair spirit, the sharp decline in price at the beginning of the month having given a stimulus to business and some encouragement to buyers to hold stock, but whenever there has been any extra pressure upon the market, quotations have given way. The weakness in price has been chiefly shown in good Pekoes from 1s. 3d. upwards, which sell irregularly and fully 1d. to 1½d. lower, owing to the abundant supply; good Broken Pekoes, however, from 1s. 4d. upwards, being less plentiful, maintain their value. Finest grades are also firm, late imports containing only a moderate proportion, while the marked falling off in quality of shipments from several districts reduces the supply of fine tea. In low descriptions, Pekoes from 11½d. to 1s. 2d., and Souchongs and Pekoe Souchongs from 9½d. to 11d., are about ½d. cheaper, while broken teas of all classes, from 1s. 2d. down to 7d., show ½d. to 1d. decline."

COLONIAL AND FOREIGN PRODUCE.—We extract the following from Messrs. Thompson's Overland Circular:—"The general course of business does not show the improvement which was expected in the autumn months, and the Produce Markets, with few exceptions, remain inactive. Coffee has been firm at the recent advance. East India descriptions are more readily saleable, and Plantation Ceylon is unchanged, Costa Rice and Guatemala steady. Rio has sold to a fair extent at better prices. Best sugar shows a further slight reduction, and is now offering thereat. West India refining has realised firmer rates, but the market is now quiet, low brown Eastern sorts meet with some inquiry. The deliveries continue large, and the stock less than at same time last year. No change has transpired in the tea market, and the public sales have gone at late low quotations. There is a large supply of Indian, which is selling freely at slightly reduced rates for inferior qualities, good being firm. The rice market is quiet. White pepper continues influenced by speculative operations, a decline being established in all positions, and a considerable quantity sold for delivery in January to February next. For black, to arrive, sales are reported at easier rates. Some parcels of cinnamon in the weekly sales, partly 'without reserve,' found buyers at 2d. to 3d. per lb. decline on August quotations. Zanzibar cloves have receded in price; also common to medium qualities of Cochin ginger. The market for cocoa is very firm. At the public sales of cinchona, Ceylon brought firmer rates."

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—Tenders were received to-day at the Bank of England for £250,000 in Government bills and Telegraph Transfers on India. The amounts in bills allotted were:—On Calcutta £8,000, and on Bombay £1,000. Allotments of Telegraphic Transfers were made as under:—On Calcutta £120,000, and on Bombay £62,500. The same amount will be offered for tender next Wednesday. According to a statement issued by the India Office, the amount of bills and telegraphic transfers sold is as follows:—From Oct. 24 to 30 the amount sold was Rs. 17,30,000, realising £141,156, making a total since April 1 of Rs. 1,052,05,150, realising £8,531,528.

The report is again gaining ground, the Englishman says, that the Duke of Connaught will succeed General Hardinge as Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army in March next.

Lieutenants Milford and Bright Smith, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, are permitted to exchange into the 1st and 2nd Battalions respectively. Lieutenants Amesbury, South Yorkshire, and Hussey, Cheshire, have been posted to the 1st and 2nd Battalions of their regiments; and Lieutenant Boileau, South Yorkshire, is removed to the 1st Battalion. Captain Vincent, 2nd Scottish Rifles, proceeds home for depot duty. Lieutenants Radcliffe and Ozzard have been appointed Quartermaster and Adjutant, 14th N.I., respectively. Surgeon D. F. Barry is transferred from Meerut to Calcutta in officiating medical charge of the 17th N.I. and Surgeon J. Clarke, from Morar to Cachar, in similar charge of the 12th N.I.

MAIL NEWS.

During the absence of Colonel W. W. Goodfellow, C. B., R. E., on privilege leave, Colonel C. A. Goodfellow, V. C., R. E., will act as Superintending Engineer, Southern Division, and Lieut. Lister, R. E., as Executive Engineer, Kanara.

Mr. James Jones has been appointed Inspector of Factories "within the limits of the City and Island of Bombay." He assumed charge of his office on Oct. 3.

A Marine Court of Inquiry has been appointed (consisting of Mr. Cooper, Chief Presidency Magistrate, Captain Tyson of the s.s. William Symington, and Captain De Horne of the s.s. Gwalior) to investigate the circumstances of the wreck of the s.s. Airey.

The latest Bombay Presidency District Season Reports, for the week ended on Oct. 10, are officially summarised as follows:—"River continues low in Sind. Rain in almost all the districts of the Presidency; still wanted in parts of Ahmedabad, Belgaum, and Dharwar. Crops in good condition in Gujerat, Poona, and Sholapur, but injured by excessive rain in Nasik, Khandesh, Ahmednuggar, and part of Kaladgi. Rabi sowing in progress in some districts. Little damage from locusts. Cholera, fever, and cattle-disease in a few places." The greatest number of cholera deaths reported in any one district during the week was twenty-five in the Kaladgi Collectorate.

The increase of salt revenue collected, as compared with last year, was maintained in August, during which month Rs. 38,28,000 was paid, in comparison to Rs. 34,31,000 for the corresponding month of 1882. On the first five months of the present financial year there has been a gain in the revenue from this source of Rs. 11,18,000, the totals being Rs. 2,36,75,000 from April to August inclusive this year, and Rs. 2,25,57,000 for the five months of the official year 1882-83. As compared with 1881, the year before the reduction of the salt duty, the figures for the first five months of this year show a decrease in the revenue of Rs. 44,94,000, and an increase in the amount of salt paying duty of 1,157,000 maunds.

Captain Taylor, the master attendant at Madras, has received from the Dutch Government at Batavia, a chart of the Sunda Straits, as surveyed after the recent earthquake and tidal wave.

Orders have been issued at Goa to put into circulation the new currency notes for Rs. 5, 10, 20, 50, 100, and 500, belonging to the Portuguese Government.

The statement of the Indian Sea and Land Customs Revenue (excluding Salt Revenue) for the first five months of the official year 1883-84 shows a falling off of four lakhs of rupees, as compared with the figures for the corresponding period of last year. This loss seems to have been occasioned by the heavy fall in the export revenue of British Burmah—viz., from twenty-five to eighteen lakhs, accounted for by the diminished receipts this year from the rice exports. The returns from all the other Provinces show slight increases of Custom Revenue.

The gross receipts of Indian railways during the first five months of the current financial year show an increase of upwards of 91 lakhs of rupees as compared with the corresponding period of last year, the net gain in receipts after deducting extra expenses being 51 lakhs. All the different lines share the general increase of traffic, with the exception of the Eastern Bengal and the Madras Railway, and a few short lines which show small decreases. The increase in the East Indian amounts to upwards of 32 lakhs of rupees, while the Indus Valley and Kandahar, without the addition of a single mile to the total length open, have nearly doubled its receipts for the five months, viz., from 17½ lakhs of rupees in 1882 to 33 lakhs in the present year.

The accounts of the Trade and Navigation of British India for the first five months of the current financial year, as compared with those of the corresponding period of last year, show that the value of merchandise imported was Rs. 21,80,96,800 as against Rs. 19,93,22,876, and that of merchandise exported Rs. 38,27,70,475, as against Rs. 33,15,15,520. The value of the treasure imported was Rs. 4,78,36,232, as against Rs. 7,67,79,628, and that of treasure exported Rs. 44,37,556, as against Rs. 38,48,017. The gross amount of import duty collected was Rs. 94,22,889, as against Rs. 87,88,402, and of export duty Rs. 29,43,693, as against Rs. 35,15,10.

A long memorial has been submitted to the Viceroy in Council by the British India Association of Calcutta, on the subject of the Bengal Rent Bill. The memorialists describe the measure as "a direct violation of the Permanent Settlement Regulations, subversive of recognised rights of property, and calculated to deprive a large body of useful and loyal subjects of Her Majesty the Queen Empress of their just and cherished rights, and to breed discord, litigation, and ill-will between them and the peasantry," and in this way "a measure of questionable policy, manifest injustice, and necessarily detrimental to the vital interests of the community." The prayer of the memorial is that His Excellency the Viceroy in Council will be pleased, before the select committee proceeds to discuss its detailed provisions, "to reconsider the principles of the Bill."

The party to accompany the Viceroy, when leaving Simla on Oct. 16 in addition to her Excellency the Marchioness of Ripon, will consist of the Private and Military Secretaries, the Rev. Father Kerr, Dr. Anderson, Captain Hope, of the Foreign Department, Colonel Bamfield (Inspector-General of Police) and Captains Harbord, Lord Alwyne Compton, and St. Quintin, Aides-de-Camp.

THE VICEREGAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

(FROM THE CORRESPONDENT OF THE "TIMES OF INDIA.")

SIMLA, OCT. 10.—At to-day's meeting of the Council the Cattle Trespass Amendment Act was passed.

The Hon. Mr. Quinton moved that the report of the select committee on the Land Improvement Act be considered. He said that when the Bill was referred to the select committee observations were made by some members on agricultural banks, which attracted much attention. It was then thought necessary to legislate for the protection of State loans, and also for loans from private individuals for the improvement of the land. The latter had to be abandoned. The present measure was merely to consolidate the law relating to loans by Government for agricultural purposes. He pointed out that the storage and supply of water for famine purposes was essential, and referred to the several Government irrigation works in India. He said that the Government was alive to the importance of irrigation works, but the question was too wide a one to be thoroughly provided for. He alluded to the policy of Government in encouraging people to make such provision for themselves by making advances from treasuries for wells and tanks. The enactments in force for such advances have not fulfilled the intentions of the framers. He referred to the several obstacles to success pointed out by the Local Governments and the Famine Commission. All this information had been thoroughly considered by the Select Committee, which was unable to accept the recommendation of the North-Western Province Board of Revenue to amalgamate with the present bill the North India Tucavac Act, as its objects were different. He alluded to the excellent work and beneficial results of the latter Act, and said it was not advisable to endanger its working by amalgamating it with the present Act. The Select committee declined to seek for legislative symmetry at the risk of failure. The provisions of the new bill are:—First—To enable Government to make advances for improvement on land to anyone who has the right to make such improvements, or, with the latter's consent, to any other, but not so as to injure such land which might alter the respective rights in holdings. Disputes arising out of this provision must be settled by law. The landlord and tenant law in force is not at all altered by the Bill. Improvements are defined which are identical with the provisions of the law in force. Local Governments are authorised to bring into the category of improvements any other works. Secondly—It is left optional with officers to whom application is made for advances to issue notices calling for objections. Agriculturists do not appear to have availed themselves of these loans owing to the great delay in official inquiries. In some districts these inquiries are absolutely necessary; in others they can be dispensed with. Disputants will be referred to the court when questions of title are raised, and no advances will be made till such cases are decided. Thirdly—Loans will be payable in thirty-five years. The period may be extended in special cases. The intention of the Government is not a speedy realisation of the loan but the improvement of the land. The Committee rejected the proposal that the repayment of the loan should never be required but commuted into a permanent addition to the land revenue. Other measures to lessen the cultivators' objections to borrow from Government were explained.

The Hon. Sir Stuart Bayley then referred to the unpopularity of loans at short dates with cultivators under the existing law, and gave credit to Major Sir Evelyn Baring for pointing this out. He recommended that the term of the loans should extend to thirty years, and in certain cases beyond the generation which borrowed the money. The question of converting these advances into additional revenue was strongly supported. It had certain advantages, such as popularity, and being secured on land, no collateral security was necessary. Against the proposal were the permanent settlement districts, and it was shown that it would lead to inequality of assessments. It was also considered wrong for the State to mix up loan business as capitalists with reversionary interest in value as landlord. The permanent charge was inconsistent with Section 11, and in exhausted improvements were dangerous, as cultivators would naturally call for remissions which could hardly be refused. He pointed out that Government did not wish to make a profit, but the Local Government could propose alterations to the rate of interest, which is not altered in the new bill, if found too high. He then referred to the question of compensation for improvements, and pointed to the difficulty of the English theory of lessor and lessee, and the Indian one of joint-partnership with stated rights to participate in the produce, and he showed the advantages of the latter over the former. He said that the Hon. Mr. Crossthwaite, who had accepted this view, gave up the assessment on permanent improvement as a matter of expediency. To distinguish between permanent and temporary improvement in his plan was difficult. The Local Governments, to whom the matter had been referred, had not sent replies.

His Excellency the Viceroy then said that he hoped the facilities which the present Bill would offer for obtaining loans, would encourage applicants. Regarding agricultural banks, it was not the intention of Government to abandon the scheme; and alluding to the Hon. Sir Stuart Bayley's remarks about the English theory in the tenants' rights to receive full compensation for improvements, his Excellency said that it was not the universal notion in England. There were many antagonistic opinions to the belief. He thought that the tenant should receive full compensation for adding to the letting value of his land or to its interest qualities. The case was thought different in the reclamation of land, which might be done at little expense. The improver should have land to be reclaimed at a low rental, and long enough to enable him to recoup himself, when the rent should gradually be increased. When the land was brought under full cultivation, the tenant should be allowed the benefit of further improvements. In regard to the Hon. Sir Stuart Bayley's remarks about improvements, he said that the matter could not be settled satisfactorily, but the line could always be drawn between reclamation and improvement. In concluding, he expressed a wish that the measures now taken by private individuals for the improvement of land would be successful.

The Hon. Mr. Quinton then moved that the proviso to Section 11 be as follows:—"1st—Where the improvements consist of the reclamation or irrigation of lands assessed at unirrigated rates, the increase of rate is to be taken into account after the expiration of the period fixed by the local Government in rules to be framed by them, with the sanction of the Viceroy in Council. 2nd—That nothing in this section shall entitle any person to question any assessment of land revenue otherwise than might have been questioned if the Act had not been passed."

The Hon. Sir Charles Aitchison said that he was glad to see the amendment of Section 11, as it would not have been applicable to the Punjab had it been passed in the original shape. Land assessed at a high rate would have been forced down at a loss of one-third revenue. Government having adopted the amendment, would have to legislate accordingly.

The Hon. Mr. Hope then said that the amendment expressed the principle in force in Bombay, where a revised assessment might be imposed with regard to the value and advantage of an enhancement, when the improvement created the means of utilising the advantage and was in accordance with native custom. In India, if it was reasonable that the occupier should reap the benefit of the outlay in improvement, it was equally so that the owner should secure any natural advantages inherent in property which were not already gained by the existing rental. The hon. member also said that those who objected to enhancement in such cases might also argue that the proprietor of a building site on a coal mine which he could not utilise ought to give it to others rent-free. He referred to a case in Bombay where an owner had an established right of enhancement, and yet the increase of wells by occupiers was enormous. The Bill as amended was passed into law.

THE CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE AMENDMENT BILL, 1883.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE EUROPEAN AND ANGLO-INDIAN DEFENCE ASSOCIATION.

At a meeting of the Council of the European and Anglo-Indian Association held on Friday, Sept. 28, 1883, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

"1. That, in the opinion of the Council of the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association, every legislative measure, in however modified a form, which seeks to render European British subjects liable to the criminal jurisdiction of native magistrates and judges, is vicious and obnoxious in principle, and cannot but prove oppressive and disastrous in practice.

"2. That the council have reason to believe that any further endeavour to force a measure of this description into law would be viewed as a high-handed and inequitable exercise of arbitrary power; and as a wanton and deliberate affront to the collective public opinion of practically the whole European and Anglo-Indian community in India.

"3. That, in the opinion of the Council, it is the duty of the Defence Association and of the whole of the European community to maintain their existing attitude of strenuous opposition to every legislative measure which shall seek to validate the principle of subordinating European British subjects to the criminal jurisdiction of natives.

"4. That the legal power of the Indian Legislature to pass such an Act has been challenged, for valid reasons, by some of the ablest lawyers in India, and such power has on no occasion been affirmed by any decision of Her Majesty's Privy Council; and that, moreover, whether such legal power is vested in the Legislative Council or not, special class legislation of this character, when divested of the sanction of the community against which its provisions are directed, would necessarily, in public estimation, be deprived of political, moral, and equitable obligation, and, consequently, as a measure of public utility, would stand self-condemned as morally inefficient and politically inoperative.

"5. That it is, therefore, the opinion of the Council that, in the event of any such measure being enacted, it will be the duty of the Anglo-Indian community in India, until such time as such measure shall have been duly repealed, to endeavour to minimise its injustice by collectively aiding with funds and moral support every member of the community, whatsoever his position in life, who shall exercise his right of refusing to plead to a Criminal Jurisdiction which has been all but universally condemned by collective Anglo-Indian public opinion, as an unprovoked, inequitable, and capricious invasion of the existing status of European British subjects in India."

ANOTHER CASE OF SHOOTING BY A SOLDIER.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Fyzabad, on Wednesday, 19th September, Private Jacob Curtis, of the 1st Battalion Suffolk Regiment, was arraigned on the following charge:—"Using violence to his superior officer, being in the execution of his office; in that, at Fyzabad, on the 28th August, 1883, he discharged a rifle loaded with powder and a bullet, at his superior officer, in the execution of his office, Corporal James Murphy, of the same battalion. The Court found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to penal servitude for 20 years. The finding and sentence have been confirmed by H.E. the Commander in Chief in India.

Another experiment in the direction of encouraging the country industries is about to be made, an up-country paper notes, for the benefit or at the expense of the army. "For the future the gold and worsted badges which decorate the uniforms of our British and native troops are to be obtained, we are informed, in the local markets, and Government are prepared to receive tenders for their supply. As regards the more elaborate ornament, it is well known that work of the kind is done excellently both in Delhi and Lucknow, and the Sassoon Silk Mills at Bombay, we believe, have lately commenced the manufacture of gold lace."

The military authorities have proposed, a Puna paper states, that the Bombay Volunteer Rifles should take part in the Puna camp of exercise, to be held Jan. 2 and 10 next; and the matter is under the consideration of the Volunteer authorities.

KANGRA VALLEY INDIAN TEA GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,

7, NEW COVENTRY STREET, LEICESTER SQUARE.

The object of the Planters who have formed this Association is to establish a business for the direct supply of Tea from the Plantations of the Kangra Valley to the Public.

The distinctive feature of the business of this Association is, that the Tea is delivered to consumers in the original One-lb. tin foil lined parcels in which it is packed in the Valley, and it is guaranteed to be Absolutely Pure. There are three qualities, retailing respectively at 4s., 3s., and 2s. 6d.

The Association hopes that it may, without presumption, safely recommend this Tea to the Public, believing that it will continue to give the greatest satisfaction.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

"A quaint and undoubtedly clever book from the pen of a native of India. The volume consists of a series of short sketches of scenes and people in Gujarat, which may be regarded as typical of classes of the community, their ways of life and modes of thought. Mr. Malabari's English style is remarkably good, and seldom exhibits any want of ease. His book is of special interest as throwing some light on the real feeling of the natives with regard to their British rulers."—Daily Telegraph.

"The book is clever throughout."—Academy.

A RIDE TO KHIVA

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my father's medicine man had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS. W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pure and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE, THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CHLORODYNE is admitted by the Profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered. CHLORODYNE is the best remedy known for Coughs, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma. CHLORODYNE effectually checks and arrests those too often fatal diseases—Diphtheria, Fever, Croup, Ague. CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhoea, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery. CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation, and Spasms. CHLORODYNE is the only palliative in Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Toothache, Meningitis, &c.

Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manila, to the effect that cholera has been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, 1st Dec. 1864.

CAUTION.—BEWARE OF PIRACY AND IMITATIONS.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated that Dr J. COLLIS BROWNE was, undoubtedly, the Inventor of CHLORODYNE; that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say had been sworn to.—See Times, 13th July, 1864.

Sold in bottles at 1s. 1/6d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. None is genuine without the words "Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming Medical Testimony accompanies each bottle.

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EX- PRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 20 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE ILBERT BILL.

MR. PLUNKET ON THE ILBERT BILL.

A MEETING of the Earl's Court Conservative Club was held at the clubhouse, in Hogarth-street, on Thursday evening, "to consider the present political situation."

Sir ALGERNON BORTHWICK, who presided, referred to the statement which had been put forward by the Liberal agents as to the results of the recent revision of the lists of voters in Chelsea, and stated that the figures in that statement were entirely fallacious. He had no doubt that when they were tested at the poll they would disappear into limbo. (Cheers.) Having criticised the home and foreign policy of the Government, Sir Algernon called upon all the members of the Conservative party to use their utmost efforts to roll back the tide of Radicalism and Republicanism. He praised the exertions which were being made by the Conservative leaders, and announced that Lord Salisbury was coming into Chelsea this autumn to address a great meeting. (Cheers.)

The Right Hon. D. PLUNKET, M.P., who was loudly cheered, moved the following resolution:—"That this meeting condemns the policy of the present Government as disastrous to the best interests of the empire at home and abroad." He stated that he had attended a good many meetings in different parts of the country, and was persuaded that the Conservative cause was growing in strength, vigour, and confidence throughout the country. In Chelsea they had undertaken to fight one of the stiffest battles that would be fought at the next election, and he hoped they would have a brilliant victory, and send Sir Algernon Borthwick to the House of Commons. (Cheers.) Mr. Plunket continued:—"There is one topic which I desire especially to deal with this evening—the proposal of Lord Ripon—commonly called the Ilbert Bill. It is a topic which no one can deprecate as ancient history or push aside as unripe for discussion. While Parliament was sitting we were not allowed to see the most important documents bearing on the question; and even now they have only reached us through the efforts of the newspapers of this country. And yet, so far as we know, it is still the intention of the Government to force this measure through and make it the law within the next few weeks. The proposal has excited from the first great alarm and strong indignation throughout the British population of India, official and unofficial, of all classes and all political parties. It has, unfortunately, at the same time created a more bitter feeling between the Europeans and the natives than has been known in India since the evil days of the great Mutiny. And we are warned on high authority that, if this Bill be carried into law, this ill-feeling will be prolonged and further embittered. And yet many of the supporters of the Government in this country are bounding on their leaders to hurry forward this ill-starred measure, which they describe as a struggle between the two great parties. If they mean a struggle between Whigs and Tories in India, no statement could be more misleading; it is the protest of the overwhelming majority of all Anglo-Indians—the universal protest so far as the districts specially affected are concerned. I feel strongly, I confess, upon this subject, but I shall endeavour to state the case as calmly as I can, and I shall rely for every word I utter upon authorities that cannot be gainsaid. And first let me observe that, although it is called the "Indian Criminal Procedure Bill," it has nothing to do with Criminal Procedure as enforced against the natives of India. The natives of India are governed by a system of law and judicature with which they seem perfectly satisfied. It is only the British in India who will be affected by the proposed change. They believe that their interests, their liberty, their honour will be placed in jeopardy, and they appeal to us with desperate energy for help and protection. Are they men who deserve our sympathy? I shall not now inquire into the title deeds of our Indian Empire—the noblest possession of all our great inheritance. It is true that we won India by the sword; it is no less true that we hold

India by the sword; but we vindicate our right to rule on higher and nobler grounds—we claim to be benefactors as well as masters. We have vanquished them into happiness. The state of those millions of human beings when we first came amongst them has been sketched by the master hand of Macaulay, certainly no enemy of theirs. He said:—

"All the evils of despotism, and all the evils of anarchy pressed at once upon that miserable race. They knew nothing of government but its exactions. Desolation was in their imperial cities, and famine all along the banks of their broad and redundant rivers. It seemed that a few more years would suffice to efface all traces of the opulence and civilisation of an earlier age."

And what is the condition of this same country now? We have given to it repose and plenty. For years intestine war has been almost unknown; indeed, one of the dangers which seems to be before us in the future is that it may not be possible to make the food supply keep pace with the increase of the population, no longer decimated by war and pestilence. I was reading a few days ago the summary of the official reports on the state of India for 1881-2; it unfolds a wondrous landscape of prosperity and progress, in which we see that British capital and enterprise are developing anew industry and commerce amongst the inert masses, a landscape darkened scarcely by a passing cloud. And by whom has this wondrous change been wrought? Under Providence it has been worked out by a handful of Englishmen, with courage and brains. There is no Indian people save that which we have created; and but for us, the Empire would crumble away and resolve itself again into its discordant elements. What then are the forces by which it is bound together? In time of war or revolution, it is the military power of England; in time of peace it is the presence and influence of men of the British race, officials and non-officials. It is their superior will and energy which controls the administration of the law, fosters trade, and develops commerce amongst the various races, and sects, and castes that people the great peninsula. These are the men who now claim our sympathy. Are we not bound to hearken to them? Now let me shortly state to you the danger with which they say they are threatened. Until quite lately the Criminal Code of India could only be enforced against Englishmen under the direct authority of the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay; and they therefore enjoyed practical immunity in districts which lay far distant from those cities. This defect was dealt with in 1872, and jurisdiction over British offenders was given to Sessions Judges and Magistrates of the first class in each district, subject to the condition that these officials must themselves be Englishmen. That condition was at the time fully debated; but it was deliberately retained in the Code of 1872, and, after ten years' experience of working, it was re-enacted when the Code was re-considered in March, 1882. Next, I beg you to observe that this provision, which secures to British Europeans in India, who dwell outside the capital towns, the right to be tried only by men of their own race, has never been objected to by any human being, European or native, on the ground that there are not enough of such magistrates to try all cases requiring their interference; neither has there ever been the smallest imputation upon their absolute integrity or impartiality. The grievance which is now officially put forward is of an entirely different kind, as I will presently explain. Now, let us realise why it is that Englishmen so much value this right, and why they cling to it with such desperate tenacity. It is not as an empty boast of race superiority. They are content to waive this privilege in the presidency towns, where they are numerous and strong enough to take care of themselves, and where they have a powerful press to protect them; but in the country outside the towns—in what is called the Mofussil—Englishmen find themselves isolated, or living in little scattered groups amongst immense native populations, and they say to us, Englishmen at home, that under those circumstances they have and can have no guarantee for the safety of their liberty and their honour, unless, when accused of crime, they are preserved the right to be tried by magistrates of their own race. That is exactly the right of which this hated measure seeks to rob them. The first and main question is, Are their fears well founded? Will they really be exposed to these dangers, if Lord Ripon succeeds in carrying the Bill? I shall not say one word against the honour or the good intentions of the native magistracy of India. It is one of the miserable consequences of this ill-advised experiment in statesmanship that it has already produced an outburst of violent language and bitter recrimination which will rankle in the minds of both sides to this most unnecessary quarrel for years to come. Great blame in this respect rests somewhere, and great is the responsibility of these Englishmen if their indignant outcry has sprung only from panic. But that is just the question. I have read a good deal, and I have spoken long and earnestly with men of great experience and proved wisdom on this subject. But I shall not give you only my own impressions: I had rather quote from documents whose impartiality cannot be doubted. The province of Bengal is that in which this question is of paramount importance, for it contains by far the largest European population. What says the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal when asked for his opinion by Lord Ripon, and after he has carefully consulted all his subordinate officers? He writes as follows:—

"The surroundings of a Mofussil magistrate's court are not exactly the surroundings of a court at Westminster, or of the High Court in Calcutta. An Englishman, much more an Englishwoman, summoned to such a court (frequently, as evidence shows, on a false charge) has to undergo many indignities which a European officer can at once control and check, but which in a court presided over by a native find free course amidst a sympathetic audience. There is no exaggeration in this, as most persons who have had to deal with such cases can testify; and the absolute distrust which the European in the interior has of such courts arises not so much from any positive want of confidence in the magistrate, if left to himself, as from the atmosphere of perjury, forgery, and intrigue, which is about him and around him." Time will only permit me to quote one other passage. Sir Stewart Bayley is one of Lord Ripon's chief advisers, and is claimed as giving a general support to the Bill, but on this point his evidence is clear and most important; and I select it because the Chief Justice and ten of the Judges of the High Court of Bengal, when asked for their opinion, the highest and weightiest (one would think) on this question of the practical effect of a Criminal Jurisdiction Bill in their own province, adopt the language of Sir Stewart Bayley as their own. Speaking in the Council Chamber at Calcutta in March last, he said:—

"There is another aspect to the case of the opposition, which I think deserves most attentive consideration, and this is the real danger which the isolated European, living in the Mofussil, runs from having false cases trumped up against him. It is right that I should state publicly that this danger is a very real and very serious one, for probably no member of this Council has had the same experience as I have of the lives led by planters in the Mofussil. My own experience has given me a strong feeling on this matter; and anyone who knows the extreme bitterness with which disputes about land are fought out in the Mofussil, and the unscrupulous methods to which recourse is had in conducting these disputes before the Court—methods to which a planter cannot have recourse—will understand how precarious his position may become, and how essential it is to him that the law should be well and wisely administered."

And the Judges of the High Court of Bengal, while saying that they concur in the views thus expressed, go on to add that they consider that the dangers thus described in the case of planters and manufacturers would be even greater in the case of persons in an humble position of life—railway employes, artificers, and the like. Now, you will understand why it is that the English working men in India have thought it worth their while to subscribe their money, and send over one of their number to appeal to their fellow workmen in the old country for help, and protection against their own Government. Under these circumstances, if it be true, as I have read in the newspapers, that measures have been taken by members and wirepullers of the Liberal Party to anticipate the effect of Mr. Atkin's appeals to his fellows in England, and with cut and dry and irrelevant amendments to discountenance his action, because indeed it may indirectly touch the sacred ark of the present Government, then I say that I do not know and have not heard or read in my time of any action inspired by the passions of party politics equally unpatriotic and unworthy. These planters and manufacturers, these railway employes, artificers, and other persons in an humble position of life, these are the men whose courage and whose capital are developing new centres of commerce, and new sources of wealth for the benefit of their old as well as their new country. The Chief Commissioner of Assam says of them:—"They are the one intelligent, energetic, improving class in this province. They are the natural allies and assistants of the District officers, and any event which should set them in determined opposition to the Government, would be in a high degree disastrous." And now let me ask what is the kind of excuse, I cannot call it argument, which has been put forward in palliation of the original introduction of this wretched Ilbert Bill, and which is still urged in support of its passing? Remember, there is no pretence that under the law, as it stands, there is any miscarriage of justice. The only argument that I have anywhere met with, is this, that we have opened certain magisterial appointments to the natives, in which they might have to try Englishmen criminally, and would be entitled to do so but for the law which Mr. Ilbert seeks to repeal. Further, that we have promised that natives shall not, by reason of any race distinction, be debarred from enjoying office. And so we are confronted with this alternative, that either we must break faith with such natives as have earned a right to these appointments, or else we shall create what is called "a grave administrative difficulty." I need not prove to you how small is the number of natives, whose rights, present or for a long time, would be so affected. Lord Ripon admits that for the next few years they would be less than half a dozen, and, even when the system reaches its fullest development there will not be more than one-sixth of these offices ever filled by natives. There has been a great deal of heated and ingenious controversy on this subject much to be regretted, but I will not waste your time now by arguing it on abstract or hypothetical grounds. I am satisfied to give this practical answer—The dilemma has not yet arisen, and, in the opinion of those best informed, it never will arise, because the difficulty, such as it is, can be easily met in another way. Lord Ripon, in the debate on Mr. Ilbert's Bill, thus justified his policy. He said:—

"It is surely clear that, though there is not at the present moment an irresistible necessity for introducing this measure, as Lord Lytton's system develops, an irresistible necessity will arise; when you have one-sixth of the Civil Service composed of natives, it will be impossible to maintain the present restriction. Therefore, what we had to consider was, is it better to wait till this necessity becomes overwhelming and irresistible, or is it better to introduce the system now?" As we know, he decided to act at once—and with what disastrous consequences we also know. I will not stop to criticise the rather interesting glimpse that is given us in this passage of the working of the mind of an advanced Liberal politician. Of Lord Ripon personally, I wish to speak with all possible respect, and I shall content myself by quoting one passage from the Minute of Mr. Grant Duff, the Governor of Madras, upon this subject. He is the political ally of Lord Ripon. He is one of the few high functionaries in India who approve of this Bill, even in a modified form, and, I must say, in rather a left-handed fashion. Mr. Grant Duff has written as follows in answer to Lord Ripon:—

"Alors comme alors! This is not a country in which it is well to take very long views. Let us make those changes based upon our experience here and elsewhere, which we feel persuaded will produce pretty soon good effects, and let us give all reasonable satisfaction to the reasonable wishes of the people as brought before us by their authoritative spokesmen, up and down the land; but let us not be led to move at all quicker than we otherwise should, with a view to anticipate demands which may some day be made, and which it will be for our successors to grant or refuse."

In answer to Lord Ripon's solitary excuse, consider, I pray you, the practical comments of the Chief Commissioner of Assam and the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, and remember that it is in these two provinces that the vast majority of European settlers dwell. The Chief Commissioner of Assam is another of that small class who favour this Bill in theory, but he thinks that it would require a very strong case to justify any enactment that should increase and perpetuate the alienation of races which at present exists. He says:—

"No such case can, in my opinion, be made out for the Bill under discussion. The argument, from administrative inconvenience, is allowed to be a weak one. It does not exist in Assam at all, and nowhere can it become serious for several years to come." Now listen to the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal:—

"There is scarcely an exception in the support given to the irrelevancy of the administrative inconvenience theory among all the reports from local officers. . . . Executive arrangements will, it is obvious, quite easily provide, without detriment to the public interests or to the personal claims of those native officers, either that they should be in charge of districts where there are no Europeans, or, as regards the magistrates, that they should be in charge of districts where the presence of a European Joint Magistrate, or of a European Deputy Magistrate with full powers, would prevent any kind of inconvenience. Even if the time ever arrives when one-sixth of the magistracy of this province is in the hands of natives—though that is quite a different thing from one-sixth of the covenanted appointments being filled by natives, and is in itself very improbable—there could be no difficulty in carrying on the administration of criminal justice without any change in the law. But, as a question of very remote concern, it is scarcely necessary to dwell upon the requirements of very distant circumstances."

So much for the value of the only practical argument that has ever been brought forward in support of this idle and mischievous measure. It is obvious that no native candidate for judicial honours need ever really lose the enjoyment of all the income and substantial advantages of these appointments if the law remains as it is. And I for one rejoice to think that it is so; for I desire that full effect should be given to the policy of admitting natives to office wherever it can be safely and properly done. But if the native aspirant insists that he will not be satisfied with all the dignity and emoluments of these judicial offices unless they are further guerdoned by this trophy, which "not enriches him, but makes the Englishman poor indeed," then he forces me into an entirely different attitude, and I answer in the language of the Judges—"Nay; this right to be judged by his peers is the privilege not of the magistrate but of the prisoner." I will not waste your time in dealing with the vague arguments which seek to justify this Bill on the desirability of getting rid of every difference arising from race, and of clearing the stage of every anomaly. These have been, for many years, the aim of each successive Governor General who has ruled in India, and of every Cabinet that has sat at Downing-street; and so far is it from being the special property of the Radical Party, that, as a matter of fact, much more has been done in this direction by Conservative than by Liberal Administrations. I desire that we should get back as soon as possible to that happier system in which Indian policy was excluded from the demesne of party warfare. But I complain that by the precipitate introduction of this measure you have undone the good work of years; and that if you persist in it, you will make the keeping of the peace between the English and the natives of India extremely difficult; further, I see that in your eagerness to justify your hasty act, you are laying down principles which must lead far beyond what is possible to achieve, and exciting hopes that are never to be fulfilled. By all means abolish every distinction that can safely be abandoned, and lose no chance of binding more closely to you the goodwill of the races over whom you rule. But realise at once the truth that, when you have done your best wisely and well with this object, it is not within the furthest ken of this generation to see that future time when, in return, the native will truly say "thy people shall be my people" any more than he would add "and thy God shall be my God;" and that when you have, as far as possible, grafted the institutions of British freedom upon a race essentially absolute, you must, after all, fairly tell them that the ultimate goal of a parliamentary government is not for them. Above all, abstain in the meantime, I implore of you, from reproaching and reviling those Englishmen who, often under circumstances of difficulty and danger, which we at home can hardly realise, are holding for us against great odds that Empire of which we are so proud. I know that, angry as has unfortunately been the controversy in India over this miserable Bill, some words of unjust reproach, uttered at home against Englishmen in India, who in this matter felt they had their quarrel absolutely just, have cut more cruelly and sunk deeper into their hearts than all the ravings of the native press. Can we forget that this handful of men—scattered among 250,000,000 of Asiatics—indeed they are so few that you cannot call them a garrison—they are rather the sentinels and ambassadors of England—are looking ever back to the land of their birth, and in moments of peril and of trial the question which leaps into their hearts and rises to their lips is, "What will they say in England?" It has happened in my case, as I daresay in many of yours, that my own brothers, and near relations, and multitudes of friends, have cast their lot in India and the Colonies to earn their own honourable but difficult independence. They have given the best years of their youth and manhood, whether as civilians or soldiers, to the service of their beloved Sovereign, and the good name of their country—aye, and in some cases they have sealed with their life blood their simple devotion. Clothed with great and almost irresponsible authority, often in lonely places, they have done their duty to the native populations with justice, and patience, and humanity, and I who have sat at home, and have enjoyed all the benefit, and sunned myself in the glory of our Empire, cannot listen patiently to hear some solemn pompous philanthropist enjoying the cheap satisfaction of condemning the sins, and vices, and the narrow-mindedness of his countrymen abroad, and like the Pharisee of old, thanking his God that he is not as those other Englishmen! I think I have proved the reality and gravity of the injury with which Englishmen in India are being threatened if this Bill becomes law—and which fully justifies the cry of alarm and indignation which has come to us from them. I think I have shown you how impractical and remote are the dangers this Bill was intended to avert. In doing so I have founded myself mainly on the answers which have been sent to Lord Ripon, because, I believe, that after all we in this country must, in making up our minds on such subjects, rest to a great extent upon the opinions we receive from those who have spent years in India and have practical experience of the daily life of that strange country. Now let me ask you to balance with even hand the whole weight of authority which we have for and against this Bill. And first as to the views of the non-official Anglo-Indian world. You have had public meetings in India of every profession, trade, and calling. The citizens of great towns in public meetings assembled—the merchants in their chambers of commerce—the shopkeepers in their trade associations—the planters in every centre of the Mofussil—the railway servants and the skilled artisans of every trade, have joined in an absolutely unanimous protest against this. It was at first easy to raise a cheap laugh by talking of the mean motives of Calcutta lawyers—an imputation as ridiculous as it was unworthy. But the most daring orator will not impute bad and insincere minds to the whole body of his fellow-countrymen in India. But then it was said:—"Oh! this is only the opinion of the non-official world—wait and you will see what a different view will be taken by officials past and present—men of ripe experience and calm judgment." Well, so far as ex-officials who have returned to this country are concerned, I ask anyone to take up a list of those who have been found to favour the Ilbert Bill and to compare it with those who have spontaneously come forward to oppose it, and I think I may, without offence to the few distinguished men who belong to the former category, say that the smallness of their numbers and feebleness of their voice, which with all their undoubted ability and ingenuity they have been able to devise, only accentuates by contrast the overwhelming force of authority arrayed on the other side. But what I want specially to call public attention to on the present occasion is the result which has followed from the appeal made by Lord Ripon to officials serving, at the present time in India. Certainly, if he sent for them to curse his opponents, they have blessed them altogether! First, however, let me say one word upon the manner in which the public in this country have been treated as to information on this subject. I say that, whether by action or design, we have been put at every disadvantage in forming a fair opinion. I am not now referring to that last amazing incident when the proportions of the voices for and against the Bill were all misquoted and, indeed, reversed by telegram. I make no charge against anyone in that matter, and I shall be glad when we receive some authoritative explanation. But I cannot as easily pass by the official message which in last March announced to this country the result of the debate in the Council Chamber upon the introduction of this Ilbert Bill. You, no doubt, remember that a telegram was sent from Calcutta to England as if it had come in the ordinary course of Reuters Agency, which is generally entirely reliable. It purported to give a fair summary of the debate. But while the speeches in favour of the Bill were reproduced at great length, several or most of the speeches in opposition to it, including those of General Wilson and the Lieutenant Governor, were either entirely omitted or inadequately reported. And you remember how it was admitted in Parliament that this misleading telegram was authorised and paid for by the Government of India. As a fact the weight of argument and experienced authority were overwhelmingly on the other side. But this false statement got the start; it was copied into all the provincial papers, and in many of them that false impression has, I believe, never been corrected. One would have thought that after this unpleasant incident, whatever may be its true explanation, the Indian Government would have been zealously and jealously anxious to inform opinion at home fully and fairly, and as soon as possible, on all subsequent occasions. But what has really happened? Many of these documents must have arrived early in the spring and summer. But not until Sept. 15, when Parliament had been safely got rid of, was one ray of light thrown upon the subject from any official source. By the enterprise and public spirit of the press we have from time to time obtained fragments of the story. But now, when you put them altogether, what is the result? There cannot be a doubt but that these Indian officials must have felt the strongest pressure to side with the Viceroy and support this Bill. Yet never, I suppose, in the history of such affairs has there been a repudiation and a condemnation so complete. These opinions were carefully and, I believe, faithfully analysed in the Times newspaper of Sept. 10, and the general result may be shortly stated, as follows:—

"An overwhelming majority oppose the Bill. The few friends of the measure are for the most part men of little Indian experience. It may be remarked, too, that the Bill meets with most favour, or, to speak more accurately, with least hostility, in the Bombay province—in which an even more sweeping measure would have but little effect; while in Bengal, Assam, and the planting districts of Madras and Coorg, the only provinces practically affected, it has no considerable European supporter. In Assam, all the district officers consulted, fourteen in number, recommend the withdrawal of the Bill. In Bengal forty-five Europeans and thirteen natives advocate a withdrawal of the Bill, while nineteen natives and an American missionary support it, and not a single voice is raised in favour of a compromise. The majority includes the Legal Remembrancer and all the Divisional Commissioners. The American missionary admits that he finds his congregation generally opposed to the measure. The following are the approximate numbers of the official opinions sent in upon Ilbert's Bill, excluding the heads of Government and the High Courts:—Europeans in favour of passing the Bill, 13; for a compromise, 36; for withdrawal, 173—total, 222. Natives in favour of passing the measure or a compromise, 49; for withdrawal, 15—total 64."

I do not believe that in the face of this overwhelming weight of authority, given at their own invitation, by those whose advice they thought it most important to take, it is credible that Lord Ripon will persevere with this Bill in its integrity. I ask it is worth while, for the sake of saving a scrap of official pride, to force upon a reluctant people in some truncated useless form a remnant of this Bill, the pith and substance of which has been condemned and abandoned? I am glad to have had this opportunity of calling your attention to a few of the leading features of this controversy as we now see them by the fuller light of these documents. There are multitudes of other topics on which time will not suffer me to dwell; but in conclusion I would express a hope that the Government will weigh well the calm and serious words in which the High Court of Bengal concluded its judgment on this measure, when they wrote that the Bill—

"Is justified by no necessity, either immediately present or sufficiently near at hand to require consideration; that the circumstances of Mofussil life render the present privileges of Europeans in the Criminal Courts not a mere sentimental gratification, but an important safeguard against a real danger; that the measure cannot be defended as contributing to the more effectual and impartial administration of justice; that the anomaly involved in the present state of the law is merely one instance of a state of things on which the entire structure of Indian society depends; that the right which the proposed legislation will take away ought not to be, and in fact is not generally, regarded as invidious or oppressive; and finally, that the Bill does not possess the elements of finality."

Let them adopt, if they choose, the friendly counsel of the High Commissioner of Assam, who, while he says that it "need be no cause of shame to them to admit that one step in advance has been proposed too soon, and should be receded from," says also that reform should be gradual and tentative, and that in his opinion this measure will, on the whole, produce more harm than good, and advises its withdrawal. Finally, let them listen to the eloquent words of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, who winds up his powerful argument with the solemn warning that there are some differences which cannot be removed by legislative enactment, and says:—

"It will recur in hostility, and scandals, and contentions whenever a serious case arises in which Englishmen are involved before native courts, and the result must be continuous agitation. Be it privilege or prejudice which the Englishman asserts here, there can be no question that among them the bare proposal to withdraw it has excited a fiercer and more perilous conflict of races than was witnessed after the Mutiny of 1857; and so the work of twenty-six years, in which every true Englishman and native has welcomed the growth of a stronger mutual regard and toleration for each other, and in which a spirit of charity and forbearance was winning its way to a better understanding of each other's wants has to be begun over again. It is the Lieutenant Governor's hope that the work may be accelerated by the abandonment of a measure which should never have been introduced, for its very abandonment will contribute, more than anything else, to the right union between all classes of Her Majesty's subjects in India, in advancing, through the social reforms which are before us, our common interests in this great Empire."

I am sure that when Lord Ripon first made this disastrous proposal he little knew the passions it would provoke. Certainly he cannot have foreseen the unexampled repudiation it would meet from those for whose sanction he has asked. In the face of such a consensus of unfavourable opinion it is yet not too late for the Government to abandon this important measure. If they obstinately persist they may no doubt rush it through the Council at Calcutta. But I am confident that once the English people learn the true story, they will sternly condemn an act which can never bring any practical benefit to the natives, and must outrage the feelings and sacrifice the interests and rights of their own countrymen in India. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. PONSONBY MOORE, in seconding the resolution, said he should like to know why we should suddenly have brought before us the possibility of another mutiny in India, owing to the action of Lord Ripon and the Government at home. A rebellion there would ruin the trade, amounting to fifty-five millions a year, which was now carried on between England and India, and would cause widespread distress in this country as well as terrible bloodshed in India. (Cheers.) All these dangers were to be faced simply for the aggrandisement of a nobleman who wished to make a name for himself. (Hear, hear.) He would ask them to compare the position of this empire in the world a the time of the Berlin Treaty and its position now, when the honour of the Englishmen had been left at Majuba Hill, and the safety and honour of Englishwomen was being imperilled in India. (Cheers.)

Colonel MALLESON supported the resolution, and in the course of a trenchant criticism of the Ilbert Bill complained that an indirect system of cibure had been adopted regarding it, so as to keep people at home in the dark. As an instance he cited the fact that Mr. Atkins, the delegate from India, had been met with a glaring attempt to pack a meeting which he contemplated holding in London; but, confident in the strength of a good cause, he (Colonel Malleison) felt assured that the movement would fail.

The CHAIRMAN, in putting the resolution, remarked that nothing could be more striking than the treatment of the working men by the Liberal Government. (Hear, hear.) When they considered the treatment to which the representative of the working men in India had been subjected by the supporters of the present Government, a feeling of burning indignation must rise in their hearts. (Cheers.) The cry of the working classes in India on this great question was that they should be saved from being made the victims of false charges heard before prejudiced native judges, and supported by the testimony of those false witnesses who, as everybody knew, had always been, and he was afraid always would be, numerous in the East. (Cheers.)

The resolution was then carried unanimously amid cheers.

Mr. HORNE PAYNE moved, and Sir A. ARBUTHNOT seconded, a vote of thanks to Mr. Plunket and Sir Algernon Borthwick for their speeches.

Sir ALGERNON BORTHWICK, in response, said he charged the present Government with continually neglecting the working-men. (Cheers.) The Government had given its attention to hundreds of spots on the face of the globe—it was stirring up disaffection in India and in our Australian colonies—but it gave no thought to the depression of trade or how it was to be remedied. (Cheers.) These were subjects which he hoped again and again to bring before the constituency; and as it was certainly his duty, so also it would be his pride and pleasure, to do so to the best of his ability. (Cheers.)

Mr. PLUNKET also briefly acknowledged the vote, and the proceedings terminated.

MR. F. T. ATKINS ON THE ILBERT BILL.

At the ordinary meeting of the Balloon Society at the Royal Aquarium on Friday evening, a lecture was delivered by Mr. F. T. ATKINS, Secretary of the United Railway and Government Servants Association, Allahabad.

Colonel MALLESON, C.S.I., presided, and in introducing the lecturer, said the object of the Bill upon which Mr. Atkins was about to lecture was to place our countrymen in India under the criminal jurisdiction of the natives of that country. It would not so much affect the ladies and gentlemen who lived in the towns of the Presidencies, because they were amply protected, and enjoyed the advantages of a public press. It was on behalf of those of our countrymen who were 300 or 400 miles from the centres of civilisation, and who were, in consequence, liable to be tyrannised over by the natives in authority that Mr. Atkins would make his appeal. He asked the meeting to banish from their minds everything that had been written and published on the subject of the Ilbert Bill, and at the conclusion of the lecture, to ask themselves how they would like their own wives and children to be subjected to the treatment Mr. Atkins had received.

Mr. ATKINS then proceeded to read his paper. He said he did not come to lecture any one, but to deliver a message from those English men and women who knew so well the terrible things that were in store for them. They did not ask for more privileges, but that their privilege of being tried by their own countrymen, which was freely accorded to the natives, might not be taken away. He denied that Englishmen went to India to plunder the country, for there were in India the bones of Englishmen who had laboured for India, and whose names were household words amongst the natives. Numbers of Englishmen died in India, and it was quite untrue that our countrymen went to India merely to bleed it. Even during the Mutiny, sepoys placed their English officers in safety; and it was the fair dealing of Englishmen with the natives that had made them respected. Englishmen in India were as tenacious of their rights as their brethren at home, and for that reason they had sent him here to advocate their cause. The reason given for the introduction of the Bill was that the native magistrates did not possess the same power as their European brethren unless they were located in towns, but the offered reward of 1,000 rupees to anyone who would show that such an administrative difference existed had never been claimed. Since his stay in England he had found that the educated natives who came over here were looked upon as types of the Indian races. That, however, was not the case, for owing to the religious influence which was exercised over native social life in India in conjunction with that of race, every native who came to this country was considered to be an outcast. When these gentlemen returned to India and were appointed magistrates they were looked upon as outcasts; and if the natives had no confidence whatever in their own countrymen, it could hardly be considered surprising that Englishmen should be less confiding. If the bill became law, many European magistrates would be deprived of their posts, for it took away from local governments power of appointing Europeans as justices of the peace, and totally destroy the equality among the magistrates which now existed. He had said elsewhere that only 10 per cent. of the natives of India could read and write any language, but he found he was wrong, for he should have said 6 per cent. Lord Mayo, a nobleman who was loved by both Englishmen and natives alike, said that the baboos whom we had educated would never allow the knowledge they possessed to be communicated to their poor fellow-countrymen, but would be careful to keep it to themselves and use it as a means of tyranny. This was perfectly true. The ignorance of the humbler classes was taken advantage of by the very men on whom extended powers of education had been bestowed, and these would not hesitate to represent the misery their unfortunate countrymen suffered from as the outcome of the injustice of British rule, until discontent ripened into anger, anger into violation of the law, and the stability of our rule in India became imperilled. He was by no means desirous to check any movement that would contribute to the welfare of our Indian Empire; but it was certainly not consistent with the principle of equality to place the poor man at the mercy of an unscrupulous man, who had no regard for his welfare, but who would accept false evidence, record it as truthful and convict upon it. Yet that was what would be done if the Ilbert Bill became law. As a Liberal in politics, he opposed it, for no measure could be termed liberal or just that ignored the righteous claims of any class. As a Christian he protested against it, for he held it improper that an idolator, who had more reverence for a cow, the mother of his gods, than he had for a woman, should exercise criminal jurisdiction over English Christian men and women. For nearly twenty years he had lived and travelled in India and worked for and with the natives, which he could not induce their countrymen to do. What they would not do he and other gentlemen had accomplished. The resolution that granted him permission to come to England to ask the sympathy and support of his fellow-countrymen was seconded by a native. If the Bill became law it would injure all classes of the community, and take away from the Englishman the privilege of trial by his peers, giving to the native magistrate of India a greater power than the Lord Chief Justice of the present time possessed. Respectable natives of both high and low degree, condemned the action of the Government, for they feared that if the privileges of the sahibs were taken away, theirs would shortly afterwards follow. He denied the statement that the Bill was in keeping with the terms of the Queen's proclamation, for words of importance had been omitted whenever that proclamation had been quoted. Many of the advocates of the Bill imagined that India, with less than 200 years of culture, was as far advanced as England with 800 years, which was a very different condition of things from that which actually obtained. All kinds of lawless acts were performed by natives of high rank, and to withdraw existing safeguards would be foolish and wrong. One thing which was especially to be feared was false evidence. Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose had said that there was not more perjury committed in India than in England, but it was strange that he should forget that in Bengal, where he came from, 700 cases investigated by the police last year were all supported by false evidence, while at Ludiana, in the Punjab, 30 innocent men were sentenced to transportation for life through false evidence. There was not a town or village in India where such evidence could not be obtained for sixpence a head, and magistrates said that it would be unfair to punish those perjurers, because they did not understand the value of an oath, and if they were punished it would be necessary to enlarge the gaols. As a matter of fact, the very religion professed by many of the natives sanctified a lie. The difficulty of obtaining truthful evidence was especially great in mill and railway cases, and if the bill were to become law, security for artisans and railway servants would be at an end. In such cases it was by no means unfrequent for conspiracies to be hatched against Europeans, and the better to carry the matter to a successful issue, the conspirators would meet in a bazaar and rehearse the trial. The question mooted by the Ilbert Bill was by no means a party one. It was purely a national question—a question of our rule in India, and of maintaining that rule in such a way that protection of their rights and privileges should be assured to all classes—both European and native.

The readings of the lecture was frequently interrupted in a most unseemly manner by persons who objected to the sentiments expressed by the lecturer, and several times the chairman was called upon to exercise his authority for the purpose of maintaining order.

Colonel PRENDERGAST WALSH moved:—"That this meeting disapproves of the amendment of the Indian Criminal Procedure Code, known as Mr. Ilbert's Bill, as being a measure which is unjust, uncalled for, and dangerous to the stability of British rule and order in India." The gallant colonel said that, having won India by the indomitable pluck of our soldiers, it had been our object to govern the country upon the strict lines of equity and justice. He knew from his own experience of them that the natives of India did not desire the passing of this measure. The masses of the people were perfectly loyal to the British Crown, and it was only the educated baboos who were agitating for this unnecessary reform, in order that they personally might profit by it.

Captain BEDFORD PIM seconded the resolution. He expressed great consideration for the native races of India, and said that the bill was not required in the remotest degree, as, after all his investigations, he could not find one single complaint against English rule as far as the magistracy was concerned. The masses of the population, instead of demanding the measure, were most anxious that it should not be introduced, as they were perfectly content with things at present existing, and quite willing to be dealt with by British magistrates, who, they knew, would treat them generously, honestly, and considerately.

Dr. CLARKE, who was called upon by the chairman to move an amendment, declined to do so, as on Friday week a resolution negating that which had just been moved would be proposed by the Rajah Rhompul Singh. He expressed approval of the policy which Lord Ripon had hitherto pursued, and trusted that the Ilbert Bill would shortly become law.

The Rajah RHOMPUL SINGH asked that the resolution might not be put to the vote until he brought forward his motion in opposition in a fortnight's time.

The CHAIRMAN declined to accede to the request, and the Rajah left the room.

Kr. KELLY gave a general condemnation to the statements of the lecturer, which he, amid much disturbance, stigmatised as inaccurate and beneath contempt.

Mr. DAWSON defended the lecturer against the aspirations of Mr. Kelly, contending that the introduction of the Ilbert Bill had created trouble and difficulties in India, which it would take a long time to dispel.

Mr. MARTIN WOOD moved as an amendment—"That in view of the many solemn promises made by the Crown and Parliament to the people of India, that they should have a due share in the administration of their country, this meeting recognises the measure known as the Ilbert Bill as in accordance with those promises, and trusts that it will be carried out as recently intimated by the Secretary of State." In the course of his speech he said that if a Conservative Government had been in power the Bill might still have been introduced, which proved almost unanimous expressions of dissent.

Mr. ALFRED HAGGARD seconded the amendment, which was opposed by Mr. J. WILSON, editor of the Daily News of Calcutta, and by Dr. BADENOCH.

On its being put to the vote, the CHAIRMAN declared it to be lost, and the original resolution to be carried by a considerable majority.

OPINIONS OF BENGAL DISTRICT OFFICERS ON THE BILL.

No. 104 J., dated 2nd May, 1883.

From—J. F. K. HEWITT, Esq., Commissioner of the Chota Nagpur Division.

To—The Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Judicial, Political, and Appointment Departments.

With reference to your letter No. 1518 J., dated 27th March, 1883, I have the honour to submit the following report on the Bill to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882.

2. I called on all the district officers and Baboo Rakhai Das Haldar, Manager, Chota Nagpore Estate, to state their views on the points mooted.

3. Major Lillingston, Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh, states that the grounds for the proposed change are, first, that Native Magistrates in presidency towns are Justices of the Peace, and exercise jurisdiction over European British subjects with the general approval and sanction of the European and Native communities, and therefore Native Magistrates in the mofussil should also exercise similar jurisdiction; secondly, that native members of the Covenanted Civil Service having been to Europe, having been acquainted with European feelings, ideas and customs, and having qualified themselves to take their places with European members of the Civil Service, should be allowed to exercise all the functions which the European members exercise; and thirdly, that by the exclusion of Native Covenanted Civilians from the power of trying European British subjects on criminal charges, administrative inconvenience might arise.

4. With regard to the first, the Deputy Commissioner thinks that it is doubtful whether Native Magistrates in presidency towns exercise jurisdiction over European British subjects with the general concurrence and sanction of European and native communities, and that the circumstances of the presidency towns are quite different from those of the mofussil, inasmuch as in the former a strong public opinion and the presence of European advocates constitute safeguards against miscarriage of justice, which are as a rule wanting in the latter. As to the second ground, he thinks that a few years' residence in Europe is not enough to enable Native Civilians to thoroughly understand the ideas and feelings of Europeans. With regard to the third ground, he cannot conceive any circumstance under which the proposed change will result in any administrative inconvenience which cannot be obviated by the Government in the Appointment Department. It is further urged that the Bill does not go far enough to remove legislative anomalies, and that the Native Civilians who have visited England to qualify themselves for the Civil Service, knowing as they did that they were debarred from exercising jurisdiction over European British subjects, have now no good reason to complain. The Deputy Commissioner says his views on the whole subject exactly coincide with those expressed in the Delhi memorial against the Bill published in the Englishman of the 17th instant.

5. Mr. Power, Deputy Commissioner of Lohardugga, states that the principle of the Bill, abstractedly considered, is an excellent one, and that it would doubtless work admirably if the people of India were all, or for the most part, philosophers. As such, however, is not the case, he thinks it would be very unwise to engraft the institutions of a free on a conquered people. India, like Ireland, is held by the sword, and by the sword alone, and anything done to weaken the prestige of the ruling nation is injudicious. There are but two entirely logical conditions—either complete freedom or absolute subjection. If a middle course be pursued, its mainspring should be maintenance of the ruling race in its position as such.

Mr. Power adds that with non-official Europeans the most objectionable feature of the Bill is that it will expose them to greater risk of injury by the institution of false charges. This objection he considers is not unfounded, as the Native Civilian Magistrates cannot fully realise the responsibility of bringing an accused person into court. He is easily taken in by the story of the complainant who is present before him, and his countrymen will doubtless take advantage of his weakness in this respect, knowing how difficult it is to prove a false case as such.

6. Major Garbett, Deputy Commissioner, Singhbhum, while holding that, with the safeguards provided, no harm is likely to result from investing Native Civilians with jurisdiction over European British subjects, considers that there is no immediate necessity for the change, and that circumstances tend to show strongly that the policy of the measure is doubtful.

7. Baboo Rakhai Das Haldar, manager of the Chota Nagpore Estate, says that no general inconvenience is likely to result from the present state of things. He maintains that the British Government, like all other Governments, is founded on force, and deprecates any measure tending to impair that force.

8. Mr. Risley, Officiating Deputy Commissioner, Manbhum, has submitted an excellent report on the whole question, and I cannot do better than quote below his remarks in extenso.

Mr. Risley writes—

"It would be out of place for me to reproduce here the arguments which have been brought forward against the Bill by Sir James Stephen and Sir Louis Jackson in the Times, and by Mr. Seton-Karr in the National Review. What has been said by those high authorities will, I assume, be considered at the proper time and place, and the objections taken by them having been clearly and forcibly stated need not be repeated here.

"I would submit that one point bearing upon the principle of the Bill has not yet been prominently brought out. It is a question of fact rather than of speculation, and I propose to say a few words upon it here. It is admitted in the Honourable Mr. Ilbert's speech upon the Bill, that the criminal cases in which Europeans are charged are few in number and of exceptional difficulty. It will also be admitted that, in considering whether a class of officers should be admitted to exercise a special jurisdiction, regard should be had to the question whether, under ordinary circumstances, they are in a favourable position to become familiar with the facts and combinations of facts with which that jurisdiction is concerned, and whether, as a rule, they are so conversant. Now the European British subjects who are likely to be affected by the Bill belong for the most part to one of the following classes:—

- (i).—Planters, including indigo, tea, coffee, silk and cinchona planters, and Europeans engaged in zemindari business.
- (ii).—British soldiers and sailors.
- (iii).—Europeans of the lower classes, including railway officials, mechanics, and vagrants.
- (iv).—The wives and female relatives of the persons included in classes (i), (ii), and (iii).

"Can it be said that Covenanted Native Civilians who have visited England know enough, or can know enough, about these classes, in particular about the last three, to be in a position to deal satisfactorily with criminal cases in which they are concerned? Speaking from what I know and have heard on good authority of the manner of life of Native Civilians in England, I have no hesitation in saying that, as a general rule, they are disqualified to try these persons criminally, by unavoidable ignorance of their habits, passions, prejudices, and peculiar moral standards. It would be difficult to find two men more hopelessly incapable of understanding one another than a highly-educated native and a British soldier or sailor; and yet, for the purpose of trying a man criminally, the power of entering into and appreciating his point of view is the one thing which is most required.

"By referring to the manner of life of Native Civilians in England, I do not mean to imply that it is otherwise than creditable. If anything, I should say it is too quiet and too decorous to give them the knowledge of European life, which is one of the objects of bringing them to England. I have seen something of native gentlemen, civilians, and others in Oxford, and I have heard a great deal from tutors and persons qualified to speak with authority. As a rule, I think native gentlemen in England see very little of society as it really is. They fall into the hands of philanthropic cliques, and see everything from their standpoint. They do not hunt, shoot, play games, or enter into any of the pursuits which bring young Englishmen in contact with their social inferiors, and teach them in a gradual, indefinite way how the large number of people who are not ladies and gentlemen look at things, and by what motives they are likely to be influenced. Native gentlemen in England live their life apart in an atmosphere of books and theories. At Oxford they are chiefly to be seen at the Union, where they show remarkable fluency in speaking on all subjects, and their speeches are quite up to the general level of Union oratory. But for all that, they are outside the real life of the place, and outside of the practical influences which an English University is supposed to exercise. Least of all, do they learn anything regarding the lower classes of Englishmen, the raw material of the Army and Navy, and the men from among whom mechanics and artisans are recruited for work in India? So far as regards the lower classes of Europeans. It may be said, however, that planters, at any rate, come from the rank of society with which native gentlemen found themselves thrown in contact in England, and that here, at any rate, their knowledge is likely to be fairly complete. Here again, however, I think that the causes indicated above, as cutting off native gentlemen in England from any adequate knowledge of the lower classes, do operate to a certain extent. Nothing is more striking in many of the criminal cases in which planters are defendants than the thoughtless schoolboy spirit in which the injury complained of has been done, and the sheer ignorance which has often indicated it. As often as not, the planter is nothing more than an English schoolboy, who has not made a success of his school career, and who is turned loose in India to make his living. If he commits an assault, as he frequently does, no doubt he must be punished; but if a wise discretion is to be exercised in awarding the punishment, and the culprit is to recognise the justice, the Judge ought to be a person capable of understanding all the bearings of the case. I do not think that the average Native Civilian, even though he may have spent two or three years in England, is in a position to take quite a sound view of the class of case I describe. I do not say he will necessarily deal too harshly with the European; he may let him off too cheaply. But his experience cannot have given him the knowledge and the tact which are required to treat the case properly, and in any event his order will have little or no moral effect on the offender.

"I have written at some length upon these points without having said all that might have been said. The facts are so obvious that a mere reference to them is sufficient to suggest the conclusion. I need hardly say that nothing is further from my intention than to imply any criticism upon the native gentlemen who visit England in order to study for the Civil Service. It is not their industry or ability that is called in question. It is merely alleged that from sheer force of circumstances they are so placed as to be unable to acquire certain experience which is essential to qualify them to exercise criminal jurisdiction over certain classes of Europeans. I would admit that they might possibly be competent to deal with criminal charges against Europeans of the classes which they know, though even this is doubtful. But the distinction between these classes and the lower classes, between the educated and refined classes, and the uneducated and unrefined class, is a very wide one, and I think the Indian Law Reports can furnish instances in which even European Magistrates have been unduly severe for lack of that very knowledge of their inferiors which the Bill assumes Native Civilian will acquire by two or three years' residence in England.

"Then there is the question, in some respects a delicate one, of trying cases in which European females are concerned. It has been pointed out in one of the daily papers that criminal charges of adultery are not unknown among Europeans of the lower classes in India, and that such cases are frequently very difficult for a European Magistrate to deal with. I do not see how a Native Civilian can possibly be competent to treat such cases satisfactorily. If his training in England has given him no insight into the manners of the lower classes of Englishmen, still less can it have taught him anything about their domestic relations. Every one knows that there is much apparent coarseness and brutality in those relations, combined sometimes with real affection and good will. It is hard to expect a foreigner to go behind the mere evidence of facts on the record to draw inferences of one kind and another and to decide on the strength of those inferences. But this is in many cases the only means of doing substantial justice. On matters like this it is difficult to write very precisely. One can only state general impressions, and appeal to general experience to bear them out.

"Regarding the question of administrative inconvenience, I have really very little to say. While there are so few Native Civilian as there are at present, it is difficult to see how the point can become one of pressing importance. The utmost that can happen will apparently be a slight increase in the number of transfers of criminal cases from one district to another, which can hardly be deemed a serious evil."

9. As for my own views of the matter, I must say that, viewed as a legislative enactment and as a matter of theory, the only objection I see to the Bill in itself is that it takes away from Government the power to give European Deputy Magistrates powers to try charges against European British subjects; but this anomaly could easily be removed by adding these officers to the list of persons declared capable of being Justices of the Peace in section 1. But the case assumes a different aspect when the political expediency of the enactment comes to be considered.

10. If the cases to be tried by native Magistrates were all ordinary cases, in which there is some truth in the statements of the prosecution, and where the accused will, at least if tried impartially, be found to have committed something resembling a crime, I do not see why a native Magistrate should not be trusted to decide these cases, even when the accused are European, with quite as much confidence as European Magistrates. The average native Magistrate belonging to the class contemplated in the Bill is certainly not inferior to his European fellow Magistrates in judicial acumen, or in fairness or honesty of purpose, or in anxiety to arrive at the truth. The prevailing fault among these officers is a love of over-refining; but when this fault, as will be almost invariably the case, in the class of officers dealt with in the Act, is tempered by a calm judgment, it is not likely to lead them into error more often than even European officers of experience and sound judgment are sometimes led.

11. If, however, the case for the prosecution is, as is, too often, a tissue of skilfully concocted lies, I must say that I think that native officers, even though they are intellectually equal to their European peers, are not so well fitted to deal with it. The case is sure to be got up from a native point of view, and is, therefore, if well got up, likely to appear true to an officer accustomed to the same lines of thought; but native officers can never be so likely to detect the points which a European Magistrate, from a knowledge of the habit and modes of thought of his countrymen, would at once fix on as showing the charge to be entirely false; and therefore a European falsely accused before a native Magistrate would be deprived of one of the most valuable sources of evidence in his favour. I entirely agree with Mr. Risley in his remark showing how impossible it is that even native gentlemen who have lived a long time in Europe should have acquired that intimate acquaintance with the thoughts and habits of all classes which is necessary for any one to be trusted to judge cases which are entirely false. Again I think that it is impossible that cases involving questions as to the relations between the sexes can ever be dealt with by a native Magistrate as by one who knows the habits and modes of thought of people belonging to the classes to which those connected with the case belong, and it will be impossible even to satisfy the accused persons, or even the prosecutors, in such cases, that their case has been satisfactorily enquired into, unless the officer who tries the case is a European.

12. The feeling of want of confidence in the Judge is another very strong argument against the Bill; and though I by no means say that accused persons should be consulted as to the Judge by whom they are to be tried, I must say that, before a class of the community already numbering many thousands, and likely to increase largely in number, are deprived of a privilege which they value, and are made liable to have their cases decided by Judges whom they distrust as being unacquainted with their habits and modes of thought, it should be shown that the change is one which is rendered absolutely necessary by an administrative necessity which it is impossible to evade. Nothing is more certain to create discontent than a feeling of want of confidence in the Judges who administer criminal justice; and though this feeling may be to some extent founded on sentimental considerations, and not on solid argument, it is for that reason more likely to be tenaciously clung to by the great mass of those whose valued privilege the Bill will infringe.

13. There is certainly at present no administrative reason for stamping on these prejudices; and therefore, while I myself see no reason for doubting that Native Magistrates are not as fully competent to try cases in which Europeans are accused, as European Magistrates, except in cases of false charges and those involving questions as to the relation between the sexes, yet I must say that, looking at the great dissatisfaction it would cause to the great body of European British subjects, nothing but the most imperious necessity could justify the passing of the Bill, and this necessity certainly does not exist at present.

No. 591 J. D., dated 12th May, 1883.

From—F. B. PEACOCK, Esq., Officiating Secretary to Government, Bengal.

To—The Secretary to Government of India, Legislative Department.
In continuation of my letter No. 567 J. D., dated the 10th instant, I am directed to submit, for the information of the Government of India, copies of a letter from the Commissioner of Bhagalpore reporting on the Bill to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882.

No. 708 J., dated 1st May, 1883.

From—G. N. BARLOW, Esq., C.S.I., Commissioner of the Bhagalpore Division and Sonthal Pergunnahs.

To—The Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Judicial Department.
I have the honour to submit the report called for in your No. 1518 J., dated 27th March last, regarding the amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1882.

2. I have consulted selected officers. I submit the replies of the officers, abstract of those of others below, and give my own opinion last.

Mr. F. SKRINE, Magistrate of Bhagalpore—Considers the principles of the Bill to be as unjust as they are impolitic, because—(A) That he tried by his peers is an Englishman's birthright, as old, nay older, than Magna Charta itself. (B) That right has been invariably respected in all enactments affecting the status of European British subjects since the very commencement of our rule. (C) The right to be tried by his own countrymen has thus come to be regarded by every Englishman in India as his dearest, indeed his only, privilege.

The principle that an Englishman should be tried by his countrymen has been invariably upheld in our intercourse with all oriental nations. Witness the capitulations which prevail throughout the Ottoman Empire, and the treaties with China, which generally remove the jurisdiction over British subjects from the native tribunal to the Consular Courts.

Mr. A. WEEKES, Magistrate of Purneah—Considers the principle of the Bill unwise, unsound, impolitic and unnecessary. No inconvenience has of course yet been felt, as there is no officer of the kind contemplated by the Bill in the Purneah district.

Mr. R. PORCH, Magistrate of Maldah—Is opposed to the principle of the Bill, because upon the basis of an experience of 27 years, he considers that no European under trial, unless he be ignorant of the common ways of the country as to forgery, perjury, and fabrication of false evidence, could have any confidence in the impartiality and competence of a court presided over by a native officer, covenanted or otherwise. Native officers, by their own ways and standards of living, thinking and acting, show and admit themselves to be incompetent to deal with the ordinary issues involved in cases against Europeans, whose ways and motives they do not understand. The occurrence of any administrative difficulty is not foreseen.

Mr. W. OLDHAM, Deputy Commissioner of Sonthal Pergunnahs—Points out that the first act following the rebellion of 1855 in the Sonthal Pergunnahs was to put the people entirely under European officers, because it was felt and found that native officials were incapable of dealing with justice the wild tribes whom they regarded as both savage and alien, to whom they could not listen with patience and without contempt; whose positions, feelings, motives and actions they could not realise nor judge of. This want of sympathy was comprehended by the wild people, who regarded the native officials with intense mistrust and thorough aversion, as under their regime the Sonthals were at the mercy of every intriguer who knew how to employ the machinery of the native courts. Since 1873 a few Sub-Deputy Magistrates and Collectors have been employed in the district, with petty powers under the supervision of European officers; and since 1882, one picked native Deputy Magistrate has been in charge of a minor sub-division. As regards the sub-deputies, there has not been one whose conduct in cases Mr. Oldham, during his term of office, has not had occasion to animadvert upon as approaching that which has been assigned as a chief cause of the Sonthal rebellion. As regards the picked Deputy Magistrate in charge of a sub-division, he has worthily fulfilled the trust reposed in him. Nevertheless several petitions have been received during his short incumbency complaining that it is contrary to Government orders to employ a native officer, and asking that a European may be sent.

This review has two aspects. If the competency of an ordinary Native Magistrate to administer a Sonthal sub-division can be challenged for the specific reasons set forth, as it certainly is challenged, the competency of a still higher class of native officers to try Europeans is to be challenged on precisely analogous grounds—foreignness of feeling, want of sympathy, and the ease with which the machinery of the courts can be manipulated against the Europeans. The other view is that with the distinction so prominently drawn by the people of his district between a European and a Native officer, it cannot but have an all effect for it to be seen that Europeans are amenable to a jurisdiction from which the Natives shrink, and against the exercise of which they are so ready to appeal.

Mr. Oldham has made successful efforts to gain intimacy with some of the Native officers with whom he has been brought into contact during his service. He has been struck invariably not only by the want of sympathy with which his native intimates regarded such a race as the Sonthals for instance, but by the mingled aversion, disgust, and contempt with which they looked upon them. Precisely the same feeling was evidenced as regards Europeans of the lower orders, especially when they were uncouth, rough, and noisy. It is not likely that the residence of a Native Civilian in England would impart to him such sympathy with or knowledge of the lower orders.

Instances are given of the great severity with which Native officers punish crimes of violence, and of the manner in which they regard violence, no matter how extenuating the circumstances under which it was used; and it is noticed that the most frequent class of cases in which Europeans are concerned are those in which violence has been used by them, with or without extenuating circumstances.

As regards persons accused of offences, it is a common fault of the Magistracy to be guided by knowledge gained otherwise than in court.

Few officers are free from this, and the evil exists in proportion to the extent to which the officer is accessible to, or subject to, extraneous influences.

Native officers, in Mr. Oldham's experience, have shown this tendency in a far greater degree than their European colleagues, and he has never known a native officer who regarded this tendency as an evil.

Generally it is a fact that mofussil justice is very far from perfect. At present cases in which Europeans are concerned are those which are tried with the greatest care and the most consideration. The new Bill would take away this distinction in a measure. They would receive, in exchange for the good law and the justice of the presidency, the more careful law of the mofussil in all its inferiority. They would fare worse than this, as they would be tried by men incompetent to try them. They would be not only misunderstood, but he tried by courts exposed to extraneous influences.

Another difficulty, not insurmountable, but likely to be practically embarrassing, is the fact that Europeans in this country do not pay to mofussil courts, with their rough and undignified appurtenances, the respect which they would pay to similar tribunals and officers at Home. Grave scandals would occur, and the accused might become involved suddenly in most serious consequences, and liable for acts which, with a European officer dealing with him, he would have no opportunity or temptation to commit.

The Deputy Commissioner is therefore opposed to the principle of the Bill. On political grounds it would be impossible to put it into force in his district, and the same reasons must have some application elsewhere. It would operate to the serious disadvantage of the European community. It would involve complications of which, without it, there is no risk, and it would embarrass the Native Civilians whom it invested with powers.

The Deputy Commissioner can imagine no administrative difficulty as likely to arise if the Bill be not passed, as certainly none exists now.

BABOO SOSHI BHUSAN DUTT, Deputy Magistrate of Muddhepoora—Although there is no administrative difficulty now, thinks it may be felt hereafter, when the number of Native Covenanted Civilians increase, and as crime increases with the increased influx of Europeans into the country. Is of opinion that, "however good in principle the Bill might be, considering the present state of feeling, its passing into law will unnecessarily create a breach between the Europeans and Natives."

BABOO WOOMA CHURN BOSE, Deputy Magistrate of Banka—Europeans have waived the valued privilege of being tried by their countrymen, so far as regards their amenability to native Judges in civil matters, and also in criminal cases in presidency towns. Native Judges and Magistrates have hitherto discharged their duties in these cases with integrity and impartiality; therefore there can be no wrong in extending the system prevailing in the presidency towns to the mofussil. It is true, there is between the European and Native Magistrate an essential race difference, which is a judicial disqualification in the latter, and renders him unfitted for exercising the powers proposed to be vested in him, owing to his ignorance of European ways. But the jurisdiction over Europeans is only to be granted to carefully selected native civilians, who have made their way into the service by competition and sojourn in England, and who thus have had opportunities of acquiring a knowledge of, and insight into, European ways. There still remains the question of difference of race. If native civilians are open to the charge that on this account they are rendered less possessed of tact, judgment and impartiality, or if it renders Europeans less disposed to submit and confide in their jurisdiction, then the powers contemplated in the Bill should not be conferred.

Mr. S. S. JONES, C.S., Sub-divisional Officer of Deoghur—Cannot say that members of the three first classes named in the Bill are not competent to try European British subjects, or maintain that all British subjects are entitled everywhere in India to be tried only by European British subjects. In towns they are not so tried. The question is one of administrative ways and means, the end being good government and the contentment or tacquiescence of those affected by any legislative change removing a fel difficulty. Knows of no administrative difficulty as yet to have arisen, nor likely to arise within the next ten years.

Mr. W. SMITH, Sub-divisional Officer of Doonika—Disapproves of the Bill. Had experience in European cases at Rajmehal for four years (probably at the time of making the railway). Some of the parties were newly arrived Scotch women, and cases between husband and wife; cannot conceive it possible for any native Magistrate to have dealt with such cases successfully. He could not have understood the language used, or appreciated the domestic differences involved. He would have found it difficult to have his authority or office respected, specially while the parties were angry; and the attempt to deal with a simple offence might have led the European concerned to become involved in a serious one.

BABOO SHARODA PROSHAD CHATTERJEE, Personal Assistant to Commissioner—Thinks the present system under which the most highly-educated native of India cannot try a European British subject, while he can try any other cultivated European or American, indefensible. The pleas which have been urged against the Bill, viz., the ignorance of the native Judge as regards the habits of, or want of sympathy with, the European British subject, apply in the same force to the other cases referred to. The only intelligible ground that can be adduced against the Bill is that the change in the law would lessen the prestige of the conquering race in this country, but the persons (Europeans) likely to appear as criminals belong to the lowest social strata, and the trial of these cannot lessen the awe and respect which the name of an Englishman inspires in India.

Criminal statistics (in this part of the country at least) do not bear out the assertion that Europeans are likely to be harassed with false complaints. The number of these is small.

BABOO GOSAIN DAS DUTT, Deputy Magistrate of Kissingunge—It is impossible for any man holding liberal views to deny the expediency of removing distinction founded merely on differences of race or class; provided that the evil consequences of such removal do not more than counterbalance the benefit that must naturally result from action based on sound political principles, and provided that the proposed change is one of sufficient magnitude to justify the rousing of an opposition which, even though it be unreasonable, is in itself an actual evil. Thinks that there is very little or no probability of administrative inconvenience arising if the Bill be not passed. The powers, if granted, should only be given to those covenanted civilians (native) who have come back from England, and are acquainted with the manners and customs of the people whom they will have to try. Otherwise, to extend the jurisdiction to covenanted civilians who have been selected in this country, would be to put up a tribunal quite ignorant of the manners and habits of the people whom they have to try, and consequently the results of such trials are never expected to give any satisfaction.

3. My own opinion is as follows:—I concur in all the reasons which have been adduced by the various officers who have objected to the Bill. I sum up my objections thus:—

(a.)—Native Magistrates, &c., are incompetent to try Europeans on account of their ignorance of the habits, actions, and modes of thought of the Europeans. The disqualification extends to the covenanted native civilians who have visited England, as it is impossible to suppose that a three or four years' residence in that country, on the part of a youth, for the purposes of study, can have given him a really practical and sympathetic knowledge of the European character. It extends in the fullest degree to those who have never been to England (and who are likely apparently to form the bulk of the officers employed in the future), and upon this head it seems sufficient to ask the question whence, with the existing state of inter-communication between Europeans and natives in this country, can these last be supposed to have acquired their knowledge of European character and ways?

(b.)—The proposed change, if carried out, will place the European under greater disadvantages than at present. Whatever may be the case in the large presidency and other towns, it is an undoubted fact that in the mofussil a certain respect is felt for a European, as such, whether it be in the case of an official or settler. In the latter, the protection thus afforded is one of the few compensations enjoyed for the life of isolation which he lives. If the right of being tried by his countrymen is taken away from the European, increased recourse to false cases and such like will certainly be had by those who resort to such practices.

(c.)—Native officials in the mofussil would not be able to command respect for themselves and their offices. This would especially be the case with Europeans of the lower orders, and very grave scandals would be the result. This is a real practical danger which will be testified to by many officers. The argument that this difficulty has not been felt in the exercise of jurisdiction by civil courts over Europeans is not a safe one, for the temper of an accused in a criminal court is quite distinct from the attitude of the parties to a suit in the civil courts.

(d.)—The passing of the Bill will widen and perpetuate the breach between Europeans and natives that has already been opened by its proposal. There is no doubting the depth of the feelings that have been already aroused. Europeans and natives of enlightened character, who have worked together heretofore with common feelings and single aim, are almost to a man divided upon the present subject, where, that is to say, the latter support the Bill; for as a fact only a few of the advanced section of the native community are interested in the matter. The bulk of the people are ignorant even of the proposals, and, if I am not mistaken, the old-fashioned native of good degree, when he came to understand the measure, would be astonished at and reject it.

(e.)—The whole European community will be bitterly alienated from the Government. Is this politically safe? Or if there be no danger from such a state of things, is it justifiable or desirable to drive them into such an attitude? For their services in the Mutiny, and in advancing the country, are the European British subjects entitled to no consideration?

4. I believe that at the present or in the future, at all events for years to come, there is absolutely no administrative inconvenience likely to occur from matters remaining as they are and have been.

5. Although not instructed to do so, I consulted four non-official European gentlemen upon the question—selected persons, who have spent long lives in the interior of the country, living in close and most cordial relation with natives of all classes, who have, some of them, made large fortunes as the fruit of their labours. These men might be expected to give just and reasonable opinions, unaffected by the excitement that the Bill has aroused. As one man, they give their voice against the proposed measure.

No. 464, dated 2nd May, 1883.

From—W. H. VERNER, Esq., Sessions Judge of Bhagulpore.

To—The Commissioner of the Bhagulpore Division.

You have asked me for an expression of my opinion on the principle of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill, and also whether I think that the present system results in inconvenience.

I am not sure that the Bill rests on any principle. There appears, however, to be underlying it some such idea as this:—If a European is allowed to try a native of this country on a criminal charge, a native of the country should be allowed to try a European on a similar charge. Judging by much of what appears in print, the arguments of those who entertain this idea are that one man is as good as another, that one race is as good as another, that a conquering race is no better than a conquered race, and so on. On the other hand, the arguments of those opposed to the idea are often that one man is better than another, that a conquering race is superior to a conquered race, and so on. Arguments of this kind lead to no conclusion, are dangerous, and, it seems to me, on a question of practical government, irrelevant.

The probable results of the Bill appear to me the best guide in determining whether its principle is sound, if that above noted can be called a principle. I divide the results into advantages and disadvantages.

I.—ADVANTAGES.

First advantage.—Proclamation or advertisement to the world that, after a competitive examination, selected by Government, or some other test, natives of this country are entitled to sit in judgment on British-born subjects.

Second advantage.—Gratification experienced by natives of India by this proclamation or advertisement.

Third advantage.—Gratitude thereupon.

Fourth advantage.—Administrative convenience.

It is possible to underrate the importance of the first of these advantages. But it should be remembered, that the true liberal is a man of ideas, and in the interests of the nations at large these ideas should be proclaimed. I do not attribute much weight to the second and third advantages. The gratification will be confined to a small section of the community, and the gratitude to one still smaller. The fourth advantage, namely, administrative convenience, requires consideration. Were it apparent that by the Bill the administration and government of the country would proceed much more conveniently, there would be at least one practical, as opposed to a sentimental, argument for the Bill. But as a matter of fact the existing system presents, and seems likely to present, no material inconveniences. The additional administrative convenience secured by the Bill would be infinitesimal.

II.—DISADVANTAGES.

First disadvantage.—Dismay of European British subjects at the loss of a highly valued privilege.

Second disadvantage.—Race exacerbation.

Third disadvantage.—Check to the material prosperity of the country.

Fourth disadvantage.—Comparative unfitness of natives of this country for the trial of Europeans.

The first of these disadvantages, like some of the advantages previously noted, is to some extent a matter of sentiment. In the one case, however, the sentiment is of mushroom growth, while in the other it is like a tree which has become deeply rooted in the lapse of centuries. The second disadvantage is momentous. A measure which must in a country like India increase race antagonism is, so far, condemned. The most ardent liberal, the man of the most advanced views, would probably admit this. To those who hope for a time when the peoples of India will freely join in the government of their country, there could be no greater blow than the present Bill. What might come last has been put first; what might have been the crown of the edifice is now a stumbling block in the path of the builders. The third disadvantage arises from the fact that anything which promotes alarm, race antagonism, or a feeling of distrust, whether against the people or the Government, must tend to check the influx of European capital; and most men who have thought over the matter agree that the great material want of India is capital. About the fourth disadvantage there can, I think, be little doubt. Owing to many causes to which I need not refer at length, a native gentleman would, when trying a European British subject, stand at a disadvantage beside his European compeer. No doubt by a residence in England this comparative unfitness would be lessened, more especially in those rare cases where, owing to emancipation from caste feelings and other fortunate circumstance, the Indian gentleman was able to become intimate with English people, English habits, thoughts and feelings, and English family life. But it may be stated without fear of contradiction that, ceteris paribus, the European officer will be more fit than the native to try Europeans. It may be said that by a parity of reasoning native officers are more fitted than Europeans to try natives; but without entering upon the discussion of this question, and of certain political questions connected with it, it is sufficient to say that this, even if admitted, forms no argument. It can hardly be maintained that because Europeans, though more unfitted for the purpose than natives, try natives, therefore natives, though more unfitted for the purpose than Europeans, should try Europeans. Two blacks do not make a white.

The disadvantages of the Bill appear to greatly outweigh its advantages, and it must be remembered that it is for the advocates of change to prove their case.

No. 132, dated 9th April, 1883.

From—F. COWLEY, Esq., Judge of Purneah,

To—The Commissioner of the Bhagalpore Division.

In reply to your memorandum No. 455J., dated the 2nd, and received on the 5th of April, I have the honour to state my opinion on the Bill No. VIII. of 1883, to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882.

2. Section 2 of the Bill is permissive, and empowers the Local Government to appoint persons, whether Europeans or not, holding certain offices, to be Justices of the Peace; but section 3 introduces a complete change, and directs that all Sessions Judges and District Magistrates shall, in virtue of their respective offices, be Justices of the Peace. The Bill then empowers any native Sessions Judge or District Magistrate to try European British subjects.

3. The reasons assigned for the Bill are that "it was thought anomalous that while natives of India were admitted to the Covenanted Civil Service, and held competent to discharge the highest judicial duties, they should be deemed incompetent to be Justices of the Peace and to exercise jurisdiction over European British subjects outside the presidency towns."

4. If this be an anomaly, it arises out of the position of Europeans in this country. Englishmen conquered India by force of arms; they hold it in a great measure by the prestige which still attaches to them as the conquerors, and any change which will be interpreted by the great mass of the people in diminution of that prestige ought to be avoided, if British dominion in India be worth retaining. In the eyes of the natives at large, and more especially of the turbulent and uneducated among them, the effect of the Bill, should it become law, must amount to a degradation of the personal status of Englishmen. To those races in India among whom our native army is recruited the propositions of the Bill must be a greater anomaly than the disqualifications which it is sought to remove.

5. If the Bill become law, a few natives will have received, or will be in a position to receive, authority to try European British subjects; but the benefit, if there be any to the administration, can only be gained, so far as my experience goes, at the expense of the feelings of by far the greater portion of the present European community in Bengal.

6. It is in the interests of justice that any person placed on his trial charged with an offence should have confidence in the court which is to try him, and should feel that the court is capable of fully understanding his actions or omissions; and the privilege or right of trial by one's own countrymen can be justified on this ground.

7. Natives of India, who have not been educated in England, cannot enter into the feelings and motives which prompt Englishmen, and more particularly Englishwomen, to action, and a native Judge or Magistrate in that position is, on that ground, not so qualified to deal with Europeans as is a countryman of the latter. Some of the native gentlemen who have been to England might have the necessary qualifications; but a general rule should not be based on a few exceptions.

8. On litigation generally, the views of natives and of Europeans differ materially. Some years ago, when I was in Chittagong, the Magistrate-Collector visited a village in that district, and was told that the family of a young man who had then recently died at a comparatively early age, had sustained a great loss because the young man, though not a lawyer, only a litigant, had already successfully fought out a number of cases in our courts. The narrator admiringly added—"What would he not have done had he lived longer." This love of litigation is general, and is always borne in mind by Judges and Magistrates. It is characteristic of the people in Bengal. I believe few Englishmen who are not professional lawyers would ever think of either profit or pleasure in litigation, or would not rather avoid it.

9. I have on many occasions found courts, presided over by native gentlemen, rejecting evidence, almost as a matter of course, because it consisted of statements made by relatives or dependents of one or other of the parties. Would a general assertion of that description be frequently or ever used in courts of justice in England? Such reasoning implies that perjury and subornation of perjury are believed to be ordinary weapons of attack and defence; and it shows that judgments are based largely on the probabilities arising out of the circumstances of the cases under inquiry.

10. It is not, however, only in modes of thought and characteristics, but also in habits of living, in social and domestic institutions, that Europeans and natives differ. A native, however well educated, must find it difficult to understand a European; and I therefore think that the objection of Europeans to being judged by natives rests on more than a sentimental foundation.

11. Englishwomen are more disadvantageously situated in this matter than Englishmen. It is not even an indignity that European ladies should be liable to be tried by men who allow polygamy, and who regard females as inferior beings, not fit to be trusted to appear in public.

12. It may be urged that natives are tried by Europeans; but this is an anomaly which probably cannot be removed till Europeans cease to govern India, and which exists within comparatively narrow limits. Most trials of natives are presided over by native officers, and in all sessions courts in Bengal trials are held either with assessors or with jurors, some, generally all, of whom are natives. Even if one admit, which I do not, that natives object to being tried by Europeans, that is no reason why Europeans should be unnecessarily subjected to a tribunal which they deem to be objectionable.

13. It is said that race-feeling should be allowed no weight. That is true if the term be used in an invidious sense; but if it mean superior trust in men believed to have inherited those qualities which have given actual pre-eminence to any particular race, its existence cannot be ignored in practical legislation.

14. In a country like India, where many different races exist side by side, and where personal privileges are extensively recognised, legislation should studiously avoid raising questions of race unnecessarily. Judged by this standard, and by the result of its introduction the Bill must be condemned.

15. I think the Bill is erroneous in principle, because it tends to place certain persons who may be charged with offences under disadvantages to which they are not now subject. It can only be justified on the ground of some existing and definite administrative difficulty; it is entirely unjustifiable if it be based in any degree on the wish of individuals to exercise jurisdiction. Where no legal or moral principle is involved, that person has the right to the greater consideration who has the greater interest at stake. Whether, then, is the question now in issue of more importance to the accused or to the Judge? Clearly a Judge, acting simply as such, has nothing to gain or to lose by trying any particular person. It is not alleged that the present system enables criminals to escape justice, and till there be administrative necessity for a change, there is no good reason why a change should be made.

16. It has been suggested that opposition to the Bill indicates a wish to hinder educated natives of India from advancing socially and politically; but this is wrong. Ample field for their energies is being opened out to them in the system of Local Self-Government, now under consideration.

17. The question of administrative inconvenience raised in connection with the Bill hardly falls within my province; but I fail to see that any such inconvenience as would justify the Bill has arisen, or is likely soon to arise. If it should ever hereafter arise, it might be met by giving the Local Government authority to invest selected Magistrates of District or Sessions Judges with the necessary authority. I myself, however, see no present likelihood of that necessity arising.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1883.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Oct. 10; Madras and Allahabad, Oct. 17; Calcutta, Oct. 16.

The Indian Mirror says that "Mr. Seymour Keay, of the Nineteenth Century, returns from England next month to his post as agent of the cotton mills in Hyderabad, having at one time been agent of the local branch of the Bank of Bengal."

It may be remembered that Mr. Seymour Keay, at a meeting of the East India Association last summer, among other startling disclosures, confided to his audience that he had lent seven millions sterling, in a lordly way, without security, at Hyderabad; and also that he was going out to India this winter, to be under the benign influence of the Ilbert Bill. Whence those who are interested in Mr. Seymour Keay will learn that that gentleman believes that the Ilbert Bill, when passed into law, will affect the Native State of Hyderabad.

We hear nothing but indignation expressed at the treatment which the Calcutta Volunteers have received from Lord Ripon; and at the surly attempt to make their loyalty, their public spirit, and their feeling of duty appear like half-heartedness in the cause which they, in common with all other European British subjects in India, have so deeply at heart. The suppression of any mention of the Volunteer Guard of Honour in the first notification of the ceremonial of the Viceroy's reception, and its insertion in the second notification, are certainly very ugly facts, which look unpleasantly like a determination to make political capital for the Ilbert Bill out of the conduct of the volunteers, whether they attend or whether they stay away. If the omission in the first notification was unintentional, like the "errors in transmission" in the famous telegrams, it was more than unfortunate; it argued a negligence all the more disgraceful, because it was so obviously convenient, and was so certain to be misconstrued.

We congratulate the amiable and accomplished young Maharajah of Kuch Behar on the attainment of his majority this week.

The meeting of the East India Association, to discuss the Bengal Tenancy Bill last Wednesday, has attracted quite an unusual amount of public attention, if we may judge from the numerous reports and articles that have appeared on the subject in the London and provincial press. We deal with it in our leading columns.

The telegraphic announcement, that appeared in the Times on the morning of the day of meeting, of the unfavourable opinions of Lord Ulick Browne, Mr. Monro, Mr. Beames, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Paul, Mr. Mosley, and other experienced authorities, undoubtedly made more evident the opportune character of this important demonstration against the Bill, which Mr. Leshbridge justly calls "a magnificent measure of confiscation."

We learn from the same telegram that the Central Committee of Bengal and Behar landholders is to hold a great meeting in Calcutta on Nov. 17, to consider the official reports as published in the Gazette. As three-fourths of those opinions are hostile to the Bill in its present form—and as Mr. Rivers Thompson has also declared himself (though to some extent a supporter of the Bill) in favour of modification—it may, we trust, be taken for granted that Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert will consent to the recasting, if not the entire withdrawal, of the measure. Even Lord Ripon's sensitive amour propre can hardly take offence at this general condemnation of a Bill, to which His Excellency stands committed, only as philosophical Radical, and perhaps out of gratitude to Mr. Ilbert, not as an author. For the "Machiavellian policy," to which Lord Stanley of Alderley well referred last Wednesday, Lord Ripon will not be held personally responsible—unless he voluntarily takes upon himself the burden, by obstinately refusing to accept the warnings now so freely offered him, both by his own wise and experienced officers in Bengal, and by intelligent observers in this country.

The Indian Mirror thinks that the opinions of the Indian Civil Service on the Ilbert Bill display such inherent and incorrigible depravity, that the Service ought to be abolished forthwith. This is what our contemporary says on this interesting question:—

"The Ilbert Bill has shown the Civil Service in its true colours. It has brought all the weak points of that service most prominently forward. India's real progress will be always retarded, so long as the Civil Service is allowed to flourish as now. It is a standing menace to such progress. It will never permit anything to be done, which will clash with its own selfish interests. It is a most expensive service, and its advantages are wholly disproportionate to the cost of its maintenance."

"The first practical step towards the improvement of the status of the children of the soil should be the abolition of the Indian Civil Service. It now sits as an incubus on the general advancement of our country. Its existence in the present period of Indian history is an anomaly."

"To make the local Self-Government Scheme a reality, the Civil Service should, first of all, be knocked on the head. To reduce expenditure to an appreciable extent in the administration of India, for which Mr. Stanhope, the great supporter of the Ilbert Bill in Parliament, so lately contended, the Civil Service should be swept away. The civilians in Bengal are our magistrates and judges. After reading carefully their opinions on the Ilbert Bill, we should really be afraid to be tried by a European member of the Civil Service, if we had a case in which the opposite party was a European. With the minute of the Calcutta High Court and the opinions of the Bengal civilians on the Bill before us, we may well take a desponding view of the future administration of justice in this country, as between Europeans and natives."

The Amrita Bazar Patrika does not agree with "John Indigo." It says:—

"It is for India that England has lost her position in Europe. In Europe she is considered more an Asiatic than European Power. It is on account of India that she is so humble before Russia and France. Russia has been hoodwinking her on every occasion, but she ventures not to chastise it, lest that Power makes an attempt upon India. On the same ground, she is very cautious not to offend France. If an English Admiral had done what the French Admiral Pierre did the other day at Madagascar, the French Government would have most probably declared war against England. But the English nation has taken very coolly the insults offered to its consul and the English missionary, Mr. Shaw."

And asks:—

"Are the people under British rule as free as they were under the native? The writer does not enlighten us on this point. We do not know what sort of freedom the people enjoyed under native dynasties, but we know they were permitted to carry arms which they are not permitted to do now. As to the prosperity at that period and that of the present, we have no data before us for a comparison. But we know that then they had not to import highly-paid public servants from a foreign country for the purposes of government, neither had they to pay for a standing army in a foreign country. They had then, again, not to pay for the administration of unprofitable territory, or the cost of a war engaged by one foreign nation with another. Asoka never entered into a commercial relation with another country sacrificing the interest of his own, nor did ever Chandragupta make his subjects pay the salary of such personages as archdeacons and bishops. Whether India is getting prosperous or otherwise under British rule is evident from the single fact that, not half a decade now passes without a dreadful famine breaking out in some part or other of the country and causing the deaths of millions of people thereby."

Addressing a crowded meeting of his constituents at the Shoreditch Town Hall last evening, Mr. Fawcett, Postmaster-General and M.P. for Hackney, made the following allusions to Indian politics:—

"The question has, I know been asked, and I am sure I should be the last to complain of such a question being put—Why, considering the strong protest you made against any portion of the expenses of the Indian troops who were employed in the Afghan war being borne by India, why did you not vote against the proposal of throwing any portion of the expenses of the troops in the Egyptian campaign on India? I spoke to you on this platform in September last on this subject, and I then gave you a promise that I would not forget my former action on this subject. At the time I made that promise it appeared, judging from a despatch from Lord Ripon of remarkable ability, that the Home Government had not made up its mind whether any portion of the expenses of these Indian troops should be borne by England. I can only say that if it had been ultimately decided to throw the entire expense upon India, I should have felt it my duty to vote against the proposal of the Government. But a different course was adopted. It was decided that a considerable portion of the expenses of these Indian troops should be borne by England. I am free to confess—I wish to conceal nothing from you—that I wish the Government had arrived at a different conclusion, and had decided that the whole expense of these Indian troops should have been borne by England. A motion was brought forward in the House of Commons expressing regret that the Government was going to throw any portion of the expenses upon India. You probably have not forgotten how that motion was met by the Government. Mr. Gladstone—(prolonged cheers)—treated it as a vote of censure, and declared that if it were carried he should at once resign. There is probably no occasion on which a Prime Minister has a stronger claim to call upon all his colleagues to support him by their vote than when he has to face what he regards as a vote of censure. I admitted this feeling, but holding the opinion I did, I came to the conclusion that it was impossible for me to support the Government by my vote, and I did not do so. There are some who say, 'You ought to have gone further you ought to have voted against the Government and resigned.' (Cries of 'No.') If any number of men are to act together there must be some give and take. (Hear, hear.) This being the case, I could not help feeling that the arrangement which was ultimately adopted was in the nature of a compromise, and as I had not obtained the whole, but a considerable part of that for which I ventured to contend had been conceded, I felt that it would have been unreasonable, and I should not have been justified, in going so far as to sever my connection with the Government. (Cheers.) But this is the whole story, I hope, frankly told; and now some of you, I have seen it stated, have said, 'Why don't you, as you did in days of yore, take a greater interest in India? Why don't you speak more frequently on Indian questions?' Well, I suppose it is the experience of every one of us that there is no position in life which has not its disadvantages, and I can assure you it is a subject to me of the most sincere regret that I have not the same time or the same opportunities to devote to Indian questions as I had formerly."

Owing to holidays, we have received no market reports for the week preceding the departure of the mail.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following is the official summary of the reports of the Agricultural Department on the state of the weather and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending Oct. 9:—

"Rain in fair quantity fell during the week throughout the Madras Presidency and Mysore, which has revived the dry crops; but more is still needed in some parts. In the Bombay Presidency excessive rain has caused injury in three districts of the Deccan, while in others more rain would be beneficial. In Guzerat the crops are in good condition, but in Sind the river continues low. Some damage has also been done by heavy rain in Berar, but prospects there and in Hyderabad remain favourable. Good rain has fallen in Marwar, and lighter showers in other parts of Rajputana and the Central India States. The crops in both Rajputana and Central India promise fair, but rain is needed in Ulwar. In Burma and Assam rice prospects are on the whole good, though in the former province the deficit rainfall for the season has injured the crop in three districts. Floods have also caused some destruction. In Bengal, the Central Provinces, North Western Provinces and Oudh, and the Punjab there has been little or no rain during the week under report, and the late rice crop in Bengal is in a precarious state. Harvesting of the kharif is going on in most parts of India, and ploughing and sowing for the rabi are also in general progress, though retarded in Bengal and Northern India by the early cessation of rains. The outturn of the kharif is not yet known, but will probably be below average, especially in North Western India. The condition of cattle has improved, but mild cattle disease still prevails. Except for the prevalence of autumnal fever the public health is fair. Prices show a tendency to rise in Bengal owing to the unreasonable weather. Elsewhere they are either stationary or falling."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated Nov. 4.

"I mentioned last week that the notification prescribing the ceremonies to be observed on the occasion of the Viceroy's arrival in Calcutta had omitted the usual order requiring the Volunteers to furnish a guard of honour. A supplementary notification has now been issued which directs the East Indian Railway Volunteers to form part of the guard of honour at the Howrah Terminus, and the Calcutta Volunteers to appear in that at Government House. An evidently inspired paragraph in the Pioneer states that the first notice was only a preliminary one, published before the arrangements had been finally completed, and solely with a view of informing the public of the date of Lord Ripon's arrival.

"This change in the programme has given rise to much discussion in the Press, among the Volunteers, and in general circles. It is certain that some time ago the Calcutta Volunteers were sounded as to whether they were willing to turn out upon the occasion in question, and that a large number replied in the negative. It was accordingly supposed that their omission from the programme of the ceremony was due to a conviction on the part of the authorities that a sufficient muster could not be obtained. On the other hand there appear to be some members of the regiment who, while thoroughly disapproving Lord Ripon's policy, yet consider it their duty to turn out if ordered. One or more companies of the Calcutta Battalion and the entire body of the Railway Battalion consists of Government employés, who appear to dread the possible result of any refusal on their part to attend the parade. From these two classes a tolerable muster could probably be got together. It has accordingly been openly asserted that the supplementary notification was an afterthought, and that it was issued with a view of making political capital by representing the attendance of the Volunteers as due, not to their feeling of duty, but to a want of sympathy with the opponents of the Ilbert Bill. It is certainly strange that a mere preliminary notice for the purpose of informing the public of the date of Lord Ripon's arrival should have been issued nearly two months in advance, and should have given full particulars of the ceremony to be observed, when a single line would have sufficed. Whatever be the truth of the matter, the circumstance has unquestionably caused much bitter feeling, and it is said that several Volunteers have resigned.

"The Commissioner of the Orissa Division in his annual report makes the following remarks on the state of public feeling in his division:—

"The discussion of the policy of local-government begun in the preceding year by a small number of educated natives, mostly Bengalees, continued for some time during the year under report. The excitement at first shown seems to have much abated. The excitement regarding the Criminal Procedure Bill has been confined to the European community and the educated natives who read the papers in Bengal—the body of the people knowing nothing and caring nothing for it."

"The weather and crops reports for Bengal for the week ending October 27, record a rainfall of 14 inches below the average. The local Government has issued a circular to all the divisional Commissioners requesting them to submit a full account of the prospects of the coming crops in each district, and also of the grain stocks in hand, and the probable range of the prices of food during next year. The early cessation of the autumn rains seems to have had a very injurious effect.

"The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal left Darjeeling to-day. He will proceed to Kouch Behar to-morrow, for the purpose of installing the young Maharajah of that State, who has just attained his majority.

"There appears to be a possibility, if not a probability, of an outbreak of war between Nepal and Tibet. The quarrel arose thus. A custom prevails at Lhasa that for the first two months of the year a kind of carnival is held, during which the Ministers retire from the cares of State and make over their duties to the monks of the three great monasteries. In the course of the last carnival the monks of the great Debang monastery, who number some 7,000 men, and appear to be very disorderly, took advantage of their temporary authority to plunder the Nepalese traders in Lhasa to the extent, it is said of 70 lakhs. The Nepalese Government demands compensation for its subjects. The two Chinese Ambassadors at Lhasa have attempted to mediate, proposing that one-fourth of the damage occasioned should be made good by the Chinese Government, and one-fourth by the Lhasa Government, and one-fourth by the Debang monks, and that the plundered traders should be content to bear the loss of the remaining fourth. Nepal rejected this proposal, and sent an officer to demand full restitution. This officer was seized and detained by the Debang monks. Nepal has now proposed that representatives of both Governments should meet at the frontier and try and come to terms. It is hoped that matters may thus be peacefully arranged. Meanwhile, the Nepaulese are strengthening their frontier forts.

"A Kurrachee telegram states that Muscat has been besieged by the brother of the present Imaum. Everything has been burnt up to the walls of the fort. Her Majesty's ship Philomel had shelled the camp of the attacking force, the siege having lasted four days, on October 25. The Bedouins had assaulted the walls on the 23rd, but were repulsed with the loss of fifty-two killed. All British subjects had gone on board the Philomel."

SELECTED ARTICLES.

MR. JUSTICE FITZJAMES STEVENS ON THE ILBERT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—In March last you published a letter from me on the subject of the Ilbert Bill, in which I made some observations on the matter as it then stood. Since that time the opinion on the subject of all the Indian Local Governments, of the High Court, and of other authorities has been taken, and though the Blue-book in which they are to be published is not even yet on sale, so far as I am aware, most, if not all, of these opinions have been published. I have what purports to be a collection of them, which appeared in a supplement to the Pioneer Mail, published at Allahabad on the 9th of September last. It fills fifty-six columns, which, as nearly as I can calculate, contain about as much matter as about forty-five columns or nearly two sheets of the Times. English readers can hardly be expected to study these documents. Indeed, the unavoidable repetitions which they contain of the same arguments and the somewhat minute and technical nature of a great part of their contents, the necessity under which most of the writers feel themselves obliged of stating what they consider to be the precise effect of the Bill, and of proposing detailed alterations in it, would make it difficult for anyone to do so who had not a special acquaintance with the laws and institutions of India and a very strong interest in the subject. I have carefully read them from end to end, and they appear to me to supply clear proof that the arguments against the Bill are conclusive. I should have added that they also show the arguments in its favour to be imperceptible, if it were true that some highly distinguished persons think otherwise for reasons which they assign. With your permission I will try to give my reasons for this in a form intelligible to English readers, and freed from the many detailed and collateral discussions which have been introduced into what is substantially a very simple question. The really essential parts of the controversy seem to stand as follows:—

European British subjects in India enjoy, and have enjoyed ever since the establishment of the British power, privileges in relation to the administration of criminal justice which they regard as highly valuable, and, indeed, as essential to the comfort and security of their residence in India. These privileges inflict no injury on any one. They excite no unpopularity. They cause no injustice, and the authors of the Bill under consideration not only do not propose to sweep them away, but expressly disclaim all intention of interfering with them, except in one single point. In this particular point it is proposed to modify them in spite of the strongest protests on behalf of nearly every unofficial European in India, and probably a majority of the officials, and against the opinion of the great majority of the persons whose opinion on the subject has been asked by the Government of India. This is to be done in order to please an exceedingly small number of native officials, and for no reason whatever. The absurdity of such a proceeding is so glaring that I do not think anyone would at once admit that this way of stating the case is correct and affirm that the measure ought to become law.

I will try to prove its correctness. For the information of many Englishmen I may observe that the High Courts and the Chief Court of the Punjab may be compared for purposes of criminal justice to the old Court of Queen's Bench, that the sessions judges have a criminal jurisdiction comparable to that of our judges of assize, and that there are three classes of magistrates, each class having carefully defined powers of criminal jurisdiction. A justice of the peace in Indian law language means a person invested with the powers of an English justice of the peace, not only for the purpose of criminal jurisdiction over Europeans, but for many other purposes.

The privileges which Europeans actually possess in reference to criminal proceedings appear in the Code of Criminal Procedure as re-enacted in 1882, sections 443—463. Under the Code of Criminal Procedure European British subjects have the following privileges, which it is not proposed to alter. No Court other than a High Court can pass upon a European British subject any sentence heavier than a year's imprisonment, whereas sessions judges can pass upon natives any sentence warranted by law, including death, transportation for life, and imprisonment up to fourteen years. Magistrates of the first class may not pass upon a European British subject any sentence exceeding three months' imprisonment and a fine of Rs.1,000, whereas a first-class magistrate can sentence a native to two years' imprisonment, fine, and whipping. No second or third class magistrate can pass on any European British subject any sentence at all; whereas a second-class magistrate can sentence natives to imprisonment up to six months, Rs.200 fine, and whipping; and a third-class magistrate can sentence natives up to one month's imprisonment and a fine of Rs.50. If a European British subject is convicted by a magistrate of the first class, he may at his option appeal either to the High Court or to the Court of Session. A native can appeal only to the Court of Session. To these privileges it must, as the law stands, be added that the sessions judge by whom a European British subject is tried and the magistrate by whom he is committed or tried, must themselves be European British subjects, though process may be issued by native magistrates to compel his appearance before a magistrate competent to commit him, and this particular part of the privilege described is to be taken away by Mr. Ilbert's Bill.

Before considering the wisdom of this change it will be well to say a word or two on the nature and origin of the privilege itself.

For upwards of a century the English in India were subject not only to a different set of criminal Courts, but to a different code of criminal law from the natives. The Supreme Courts which administered the criminal law of England, with a few variations, had jurisdiction over the English all over India and over both English and natives in the three Presidency towns. The Mofussil, or as they were formerly called the country or district Courts, administered the Mahomedan criminal law with some modifications to the natives outside the Presidency towns.

In 1860, however, a great change was made. The Penal Code, which had been drafted more than twenty years before, became law, and was made applicable without distinction to all persons whatever all over India. As the Penal Code was simply a version of the criminal law of England freed from many of its technical and other defects, the effect of this was not to alter the law to which Englishmen were subject, but to extend what was substantially English law to natives. In 1861, the year after the Penal Code was passed, the law relating to the procedure of the district Courts was codified, but the procedure and jurisdiction of the High Courts was left untouched.

There were thus, in 1861, two distinct sets of Courts and two distinct modes of procedure, administering one and the same substantive law to Englishmen and natives respectively. Englishmen were triable by jury in the High Courts, but no other court had jurisdiction over them, though the principal district officers might, as justices of the peace, fine them for assaults, &c., up to Rs.500. By this time the European residents in India were much more numerous than they had been before the Mutiny, though they were by no means so numerous as they have subsequently become. It was felt to be a real and substantial grievance that there should be so few Courts before which they could be tried, and that the procedure under which the trial was to take place should be liable to so much delay and uncertainty. There was a time when, if a European committed a crime—say, a murder—at Peshawur, he could not be tried for it until a true bill had been found against him by the grand jury of Calcutta, all the witnesses having to be sent down from Peshawur to Calcutta to go before the grand jury. If the grand jury threw out the bill, the witnesses had a march of several months each way for nothing. If the bill was found, the accused person might not be in custody, and the witnesses might have to be kept till he was arrested and sent down for trial. Practically this was a denial of justice. Remedies were provided, which for many years proved practically sufficient, by abolishing the system of grand juries, and by establishing the High Court of Agra (now removed to Allahabad), the Chief Court of the Punjab, and the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon, all of which had jurisdiction over Europeans.

In 1872 the Code of Criminal Procedure was re-enacted, with some alterations. In the eleven years which had passed since 1861 the number of Europeans in India had very greatly increased, and the fact that they could be punished only upon an indictment in one of the six Courts which had jurisdiction over them was felt to be a substantial grievance. This grievance I, being then legal member of Council, and as such in charge of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, proposed to remove, by making them liable to imprisonment up to a year upon conviction before a sessions judge, and up to three months on conviction before a magistrate of the first class. This was a great abridgement of the privilege which they had previously enjoyed, but the result of it was to make the punishment of crimes committed by Europeans in any part of India as speedy, easy, and certain as the punishment of natives. It left untouched their right to trial by jury in cases of great enormity. It subjected them to punishment on conviction by a magistrate or sessions judge without a jury in cases more or less analogous to those which, in England, are tried by benches of justices or Courts of Quarter Sessions.

Before the Code of Criminal Procedure was finally discussed, the different European communities, especially, if my memory is correct, those of Calcutta and Bombay, informed the Government, through the unofficial members of the Legislative Council (Mr. Bullen Smith and Mr. Stewart, eminent merchants at Calcutta) that they recognised the necessity which existed for providing more efficiently for the exercise of criminal jurisdiction over Europeans, and did not wish to oppose it, but that they thought that it should be exercised as it always had been by judges and magistrates who were themselves European British subjects. This appeared reasonable to the special committee to which the Bill was referred, and the measure was moulded accordingly. This constituted the compromise to which frequent reference has been made in the discussions on the present measure, both here and in India, and I will say a word or two upon it, as I was the person principally concerned in the matter, and as Lord Hartington, in a speech reported in the Times of Aug. 24, said that certain members of the Council, of whom I was one, "announced their opinion that it could only be defended as a compromise, and not on broad and general grounds." I do not think I can fairly complain of this statement, but my meaning would be expressed more accurately by saying that I preferred defending my proposal as a compromise to discussing the terms of that compromise. I may not have expressed myself with perfect clearness, but I did, argue, as I shall show more fully hereafter, that the views put forward by the Europeans were reasonable in themselves. I now go further, and I say, after a full consideration of the whole subject, that I am firmly of opinion that they can be defended on broad and general grounds, and that they do rest on a distinct principle, which ought to be maintained, whereas Mr. Albert's proposal can be defended on no such grounds and rests on no such principle. My reason is as follows:—Down to 1872 no Englishman in India could be deprived of either his liberty or his life upon a criminal charge, unless he was convicted by a jury of Englishmen. When in 1872 it was proposed that Englishmen should be liable to be imprisoned up to a year for crimes not requiring a more severe punishment, they said, in effect, "Since the public good requires that English offenders should, in certain cases, be deprived of trial by jury, give us, as an equivalent, a right to English judges in the cases in which, before this time, we have had a right to English juries. If you do not do this you are inconsistent, for our right to trial by jury is preserved in cases of a more serious kind." This appears to me simple, plain, and perfectly straightforward. But it may be asked, "Why did you not propose it in the original draft of your Bill? Why did you yourself propose on that occasion to give to native judges the jurisdiction which you now say they ought not to have?" The answer is perfectly plain. It was an oversight—the point did not occur to me. There was no such thing at that time in all India as a native sessions judge. I doubt if there were any native first-class magistrates. This mistake on my part is worth notice, for it shows how easily what is plain enough to those who are likely to be affected by a law may be overlooked by a person who proposes it, if he is not likely to be affected by it. Members of the Government of India and district officers are in no danger of being criminally prosecuted. It is quite a different thing with planters and other residents in the Mofussil, and particularly with such working-men as are represented at this moment in England by their deputy, Mr. Atkins. Those who are to wear the shoe know where it will pinch.

Such is the nature and the history of the privilege of Englishmen in India in reference to criminal proceedings, which it is now proposed to diminish in one point, with the avowed view of producing a result "which should be, I (Mr. Albert) will not say final—for nothing in legislation is absolutely final—but which should contain in itself the elements of stability and durability." The privilege is in its nature this—Englishmen are not to lose the privilege of trial by a jury of their countrymen, or, when the judge of fact and law is one and the same person, of trial by a countryman, merely because the general system of criminal justice which they established in India, to its great advantage, does not and cannot include trial by jury.

The argument for the proposed change has one merit. It is plain, and it lies in the shortest possible compass. In the statement of objects and reasons which was prefixed to this as to every Indian measure, the only reason given is in these words:—"It was thought anomalous that, while natives of India were admitted to the Government Civil Service and held competent to discharge the highest judicial duties, they should be deemed incompetent to be justices of the peace and to exercise jurisdiction over European British subjects outside the Presidency towns." All the arguments which I have seen in favour of the Bill reduce themselves to variations upon this statement, coupled with the assertion that the present state of the law constitutes a slight upon the native magistrates. This is the gist of the whole discussion, though it has been overlaid with all manner of details and connected with many wide topics, from which I intentionally abstain on the present occasion.

Whatever else we may think about Indian questions, it ought surely to be an accepted principle that Indian legislation should not be speculative. Mr. Grant Duff says, admirably—

"This is not a country in which it is well to take very long views. Let us make those changes, based upon our experience here and elsewhere, which, we feel persuaded, will produce pretty soon good effect." In other words, let us legislate upon definite grounds of special immediate expediency, the value of which can be estimated with some degree of precision. The wish of the Europeans to retain their privilege on the one hand, the wish of the Government of India to remove the anomaly which they say they perceive in the position of native officials, and to relieve them from the slight which they suppose to be cast upon them thereby, are, as it appears to me, the only arguments proper to be considered on the one side and the other.

Look, then, at the merits of the case as thus defined, and first consider the view of the subject taken by the Europeans. They passionately desire to keep what they have got. Would the gratification of this wish injure others? Does it involve injustice? Is it in itself an unnatural or unreasonable wish? Of course, if the present state of things constitutes an injustice or grievance to the natives, the mere fact that the Europeans like it ought not to be held to justify it; but no such assertion can be made. If a European commits an offence in any part of India he can be brought to trial as speedily and fairly as a native, and the native has no other interest in the matter. All earlier legislation on this subject was intended to remove the injustice that Europeans could not be prosecuted without delay and expense, which practically gave them impunity. This was the justification of the increase in the number of High Courts, of the abolition of grand juries, and of the Act of 1872. It was also the justification of the measure called the Black Act, passed by Lord Macaulay, which made Europeans subject to the same civil tribunals as natives. In a civil case where suitors of different races are equally interested, it is obvious that all should be subject to one common system. But in criminal cases the prosecutor is not a party. He is only a witness, and the public interest is that the guilt of the accused should be promptly, easily, and justly decided upon by a tribunal with which it is reasonable to expect the accused to be satisfied, and these conditions are in the present state of things fulfilled. It may, however, be said that, apart from definite grievance or injustice, there is something objectionable in the very notion of any differences at all in the administration of criminal justice, that the same system ought to apply to all, and that absolute equality before the law should be established. Though the proposals of the Government of India do not go this length, this sentiment has, no doubt, much to do with the support which the Bill has received in England, and it influences several of the Indian authorities whose views on the subject have been collected and published. It appears to me that the commonplaces on this subject are commonly stated much too generally, and that the only general principle which can be laid down is that the law should correspond to the facts to which it is to be applied. It should recognise real inequalities as well as substantial equality. The multiplication of fanciful distinctions may have been more common in Europe in former times than the neglect of real differences; but each seems to me to be contrary to all sound theories of legislation.

However, generalities apart, let us examine the particular case. There can be no dispute as to the fact, whatever we may think of it, that Europeans in India are essentially, and always must be, neither more nor less than a handful of foreigners, divided from the general population of the country by every line of demarcation which can estrange one man from another. This is emphatically true of all Europeans, from the Viceroy downwards, but it is more strikingly and markedly true of the European working men employed on railway and other public works than of any other class. Consider for a moment what these lines of demarcation are. In the first place, the difference of colour makes an indelible outward and visible distinction, which appeals forcibly, emphatically, and at every moment to the eye, and this distinction substantially coincides with a whole series of other distinctions which it comes to typify and symbolise. The black man and the white man talk different languages, they hold different religions, they have different habits of life, which in most cases forbid them even to eat together, much more to associate together, and to intermarry; they live upon different kinds of food; they do different sorts of work. All their political and many of their moral opinions and feelings are not only different, but conflicting. Over and above all these differences, their relation to the country in which they live is altogether different. The Englishman is a stranger and a sojourner. Hardly any Englishman makes India his home from choice. All who can afford it send their children to England, and spend in England as large a part of their time as their money and other circumstances will permit. There is hardly any easy, friendly, unofficial, social intercourse between the English and the natives.

Whether we like it or not, this is, in fact, the state of things which exists in India, and whatever well-meant efforts may be made to bring Englishmen and natives together, it is probable that it will last, to say the least of it, for many years to come. It is not improbable, indeed, that it will rather increase than diminish, for many causes have almost, if not altogether, put an end to the connections of Europeans with native women, which at one time were very common, and of which, in some cases, children were born who strikingly displayed many of the characteristics of both their parents.

Remember that the men thus marked off from the general population of India do, in fact, rule India, that their predecessors established a regular government in India when it was in a state of helpless anarchy, that that government is essentially absolute, that the administration of criminal justice in particular is by no means what Englishmen are accustomed to in England, and that its earlier stages, especially those which are managed by the native police and subordinate magistrates, are (to use the words of the High Court of Calcutta) "believed by some persons to operate severely." Remember that no branch of English institutions is so much, if you will so irrationally, cherished as the right to trial by jury in criminal cases. Remember, lastly, that the native system of the administration of justice fell, and had to be replaced by the system now established, on account of its notorious inefficiency and corruption, and that the system which has by degrees replaced it is specially organised and devised with the view to the prevention of such inefficiency and corruption, and so recognises the possibility of its recurrence; and, putting all this together, say whether it is unnatural, unreasonable, or "anomalous," if the word is used as a term of reproach, that the English in India should cling to a system which, as nearly as circumstances will permit, reproduces the system to which they are accustomed at home, and that they should wish that system to be administered by their own countrymen. To put the whole matter in two sentences—Will Englishmen in England blame Englishmen in India for wishing to retain the right to a trial by jury, or, in cases where that is not possible, to trial by a Judge who is himself an Englishman? Will Englishmen in England think it fair that Englishmen in India should, as a reward for having established in India a system of criminal procedure adapted to the wants and habits of native society, be compelled to give up a system adapted to their own wants and habits which they have hitherto enjoyed and which is not alleged to inflict justice on anyone? The answer made to this by the Government of India appears to me extraordinary. They say, in effect, "Your desire to have a system of your own is natural and proper. It is right that you should not be subject to the same courts to the same extent as the natives. It is right that an officer who can sentence a native to be hanged should not be able to sentence a European to more than a year's imprisonment; it is right that an officer who can sentence a native to be imprisoned for six months or to be flogged should not be able to pass any sentence at all upon a European. It is right that a European should be entitled to appeal to a High Court mainly, if not wholly, composed of Europeans in cases in which a native cannot so appeal. Above all, it is right that a European should in all cases requiring more than a year's imprisonment be tried by a jury not less than half of whom are to be Europeans or Americans directed by a Judge who, in fact, though not by law, will always be an Englishman. So far we approve your views. Here, however, we draw the line. It is an intolerable anomaly that in cases in which it is inconvenient to summon a European jury you should have a right to have, by way of substitute, a European Judge. You have, it is true, enjoyed that privilege for ten years. It is true that when you consented to the modification of your right to trial by jury in all cases you did so upon the condition that you should have it. It is likewise true that it involves no sort of injustice or grievance; but we now see that it is an insult to native Judges and an anomaly, and, as we wish to put the whole matter on a footing as permanent and durable as legislation can make it, we propose to confirm the rest of your privilege and take away this part of it." This is no caricature. It is the case of the Government of India.

It appears to me that it is not an honest case. If the object is to remove anomalies, Europeans should be placed once for all and in all respects upon the same footing with regard to the criminal law as natives. As a step towards this result the proposed legislation is intelligible, and it is because the Europeans regard it in that light that they view it with so much alarm. They feel, and have a right to feel, that their right to trial by jury in cases of grave importance will be imperilled and converted into an anomaly if the equivalent for that right in cases of less importance is taken away as being an anomaly. This may not be immediately apparent to English readers, and I will try to explain it. As matters now stand, and are to continue to stand, an Englishman tried for an offence requiring a punishment of more than twelve months' imprisonment must be tried by a jury, of whom a majority are Europeans, for the jury must consist of nine, and of them not less than half must be Europeans. Practically, also, he must be tried by an English judge. I say practically, because the sittings on the original side, including all criminal trials, in the High Courts are invariably held by the English barrister Judges, though the other Judges of the Court are legally competent to sit. The reason of this is that it is hardly possible for a man who has not practised as a barrister to preside as Judge in a Court in which barristers practise, and particularly to charge a jury with any kind of efficiency. Many years' experience of the chairmen of quarter sessions has strongly impressed this on my mind. In these cases, therefore, it is conceded by law that Englishmen are to be tried by English Judges of the fact, and by practice that they are to be tried by an English Judge of the law. Why, then, in cases in which a punishment of twelve months' imprisonment or under is held to be sufficient, should not the Europeans have an equivalent right? Anyone who knows the position of Englishmen in India will, I am sure, agree with me in saying that a conviction for a criminal offence, followed by a sentence of imprisonment, is to a European in that country, especially if he is a working man, an infinitely more important thing than it is to a native, and an infinitely more serious thing than it would be to the person convicted in England. In the first place, imprisonment is in that country unavoidably far more severe to a European than it is here, on account of the climate. In the next place, the European community is so small and the means of getting employment are so restricted that a man whose character is stained by a criminal conviction is in great danger of becoming what is called a "loafer," an unemployed, prowling vagrant, a burden to himself, and a terror to others. Where the consequences of a conviction are so terrible is it not right and reasonable that the person accused should have every possible security against an improper conviction, and is not his trial by a countryman such a security, when all the circumstances of India are taken into account?

The inconsistency on which I have dwelt does appear to have attracted the attention of the Government of India to some extent. Mr. Ilbert argued as follows, in the Legislative Council, to show that the anomaly so much objected to would be avoided, and that an arrangement based upon a definite, avowable principle would be reached if his proposal were adopted. "Our object," he said, "is simply the effectual and impartial administration of justice. . . . No one who has studied the statistics and reports of the cases involving charges against European British subjects can fail to be struck with two things—first . . . that they are exceptionally rare; and, secondly that they are exceptionally troublesome and difficult." His inference is that they ought to be dealt with by officers specially qualified. But what officers are specially qualified? He said, "My answer is that the line ought to be drawn with reference to the presumable fitness of the magistrate, and to that alone, and that we ought not to base any difference which we may think fit to make between particular classes of magistrates on race distinctions, which are as invidious as they are unnecessary."

This argument is obviously meant to avoid the imputation of inconsistency which I have made. His view is that, if the change which he proposes is made, so much of the privilege as is left will correspond with the facts of the case. "Exceptionally rare and exceptionally troublesome and difficult cases" will be dealt with by exceptionally qualified magistrates. The first remark upon this argument is that, of the two statements on which it is founded, one is an argument against the Bill, and the other wholly incorrect. The assertion that criminal charges against European British subjects are "exceptionally rare" may be conceded, but the inference would seem to be that to deal with them in an exceptional way cannot perceptibly interfere with the ordinary course of justice. The fact that peers of the realm seldom commit forgery, or burglary, or theft, can hardly be regarded as an argument for abolishing or for modifying their right to be tried by their peers. It is an argument, and a strong one, for letting the matter alone.

The assertion that cases against European British subjects are "exceptionally troublesome and difficult" I believe to be altogether incorrect, and this both on general grounds and from my own experience. The trouble and difficulty of ascertaining the truth in a criminal case must depend upon the nature of the charge and of the evidence by which it is supported; but how can the matters be affected by or related to the race of the person accused? In such criminal cases against Europeans as my attention was directed to when I was in India, and there were a fair number of them, the facts presented no such peculiarity. To give a single well-known illustration. In Lord Lytton's time there was, as most of your readers will remember, much discussion on the case of a European who killed his servant at Allahabad, and who, as it was thought, was too leniently punished. The facts of that case were these:—The offender, being irritated, struck his groom, ruptured his spleen (I believe), and so caused his death. What was there in that "exceptionally troublesome or difficult?" In short, with every respect for my distinguished successor in office, I own I can see nothing in this allegation except an excuse for stopping short in a position which is itself anomalous and inconsistent. But let us go a little further and admit, for the sake of argument, that the cases in question are exceptionally troublesome and difficult. How does that justify, or tend to justify, the important parts of the existing privilege which Mr. Ilbert wishes to preserve and ratify? What has the trouble and difficulty of a case against a European to do with his liability to a less severe sentence than a native might receive from a native Judge? What is its relation to a right to be tried in all very serious cases before a different court from that by which a native could be tried? Above all, how does it justify his right to a jury of which half, at least, are to be Europeans; and with what force, while this last anomaly is left untouched, can it be asserted that all "race distinctions" are abolished?

This, however, is not all. Mr. Ilbert's argument admits that "special qualifications" ought to be required of Judges and magistrates authorised to try European British subjects. Why should not the fact that the Judge is himself a European British subject be one of those "special qualifications?" You admit it as a qualification for a juror. Why not for a Judge, who acts as a juror? Surely, it is such a qualification. For one thing, a European British subject will know the prisoner's language in a way in which no native ever knows it. For another, he will know the manners and habits of Europeans as no native ever can know them. For a third thing, which is, perhaps, the most important of all, the prisoner will trust and have confidence in a European Judge in a way in which, rightly or wrongly, he will never trust and have confidence in a man who is not his countryman. Are these qualifications nothing? If they exist, and if special qualifications are to be required, why are they not to be taken into account?

My own experience leads me to feel strongly on this head. Trying probably several hundred prisoners every year, I am continually made aware of the immense importance of being their fellow-countryman and being able as well, not merely to understand the grammatical meaning of what they say as a foreigner might (though I think a voluble Irishman stating his views in a rich brogue, or a surly Yorkshireman talking in the dialect of Tim Bobbin, would effectually puzzle the cleverest Baboo who ever took a degree at the University of Calcutta), but to enter into their habits of thought, to appreciate their behaviour, and to see what they are trying to say, though confusion, fear, and want of all the qualifications for public speaking may prevent them from saying it. I could give many instances in which this circumstance has, to my certain knowledge, averted lamentable failures of justice. I will mention one very familiar one. Pleas of guilty made by pure mistake occur at nearly every assize, and they would certainly be received and be followed by a sentence if it were not familiar knowledge to every judge that such a plea frequently means "I did do the act, but not with the intention alleged." How could any one know this, whose knowledge of English was entirely derived from books and school teaching, and whose experience of Englishmen was absolutely confined to a small number of Indian civilians? I once witnessed the following scene. A man pleaded guilty to a very serious charge and was sentenced to penal servitude. As he was being removed from the dock, he struggled, resisted, clung to the railings, and angrily called out "You cannot do it; you can't give me that sentence. I won't have it; it's all wrong!" To an English ear it was perfectly obvious that he had something to say. The Judge accordingly asked why he should not be sentenced to penal servitude? The prisoner immediately gave his reasons stating facts which did not appear on the depositions but greatly extenuated his guilt. The Judge on proof of the truth of the statement, at once reduced the prisoner's sentence to a term of imprisonment, on which the prisoner left the dock quite quietly, remarking, "Thank you, my Lord; I've nothing to say against that." If the Judge, the gaoler, and all the officers of the Court had been Hindoos, I am certain that the man's resistance and violent language—for it was very violent—would have been treated as mere lawless turbulence and not as the expression of a genuine and well-founded sense of grievance and injustice. This is exactly the experience of Mr. Gladstone, a district officer in the Punjab. "The Bengali Baboo," he says, "comes out knowing something about English literature, but nothing about the manners of Englishmen. I have noticed in Kangra that a hot-headed, blundering Englishman gives so very injudicious an account of his case and appears so vindictive that at first sight one is inclined to be prejudiced against him." "A magistrate not knowing English ways and seeing before him, on the one hand, an Englishman intensely excited and making the worst of his case in consequence, and on the other hand a meek individual (who has probably been intensely insolent outside) with the air of a suffering martyr, would naturally become indignant at the idea of the brutal Saxon trampling on a poor, inoffensive ryot; and yet it often turns out that the swaggering Englishman has simply been made a victim of by the meek villager."

Mr. Ilbert's eminent qualifications for the post which he fills need no acknowledgment from me, but, if I am not mistaken, they do not include any practical acquaintance with the actual administration of criminal justice. I do not think he ever tried a criminal case in his life, or held a brief in a criminal trial. It is possible that he may never have heard one. I have passed a large part of my life, for close upon thirty years, in criminal courts of every grade, and it is my deliberate opinion that it is in the highest degree desirable that accused persons should be tried by their countrymen whenever such an arrangement is possible; particularly and above all is this desirable in cases where one person acts as judge and jury—cases which, though most serious to the prisoner, attract little public attention. Eminent and highly cultivated persons who have not lived, as I have, in criminal courts do not know what sort of people and what sort of cases come into them. When you have to try a vulgar, ignorant, wholly uncultivated man utterly devoid of grammar, logic, and good manners, generally densely stupid and dogged, often insolent and unruly, you want qualities and a kind of knowledge which no one ever yet learnt except by actual practice. A European living for years among natives may no doubt yet come by degrees to know their peculiarities and do justice to them, but a native Judge under the new Bill would not try half-a-dozen Europeans in a year and would never learn to understand them as an Englishman would. Their illogical, incoherent, mispronounced jargon would be about as intelligible to an English-speaking native as the Latin actually spoken by common people in Rome would be to an Eton boy who had learnt to construe Virgil and Cicero, or as the Hindi of some out of the way village in the North-West Provinces to a competition civilian who had learnt Hindustani out of books.

I have trespassed long on your space, because I feel very deeply on this matter. In another letter I shall deal with the question of the slight which is supposed to be put upon native Judges by the present state of the law, and to give an account of the views expressed by the authorities consulted now.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,
J. F. STEPHEN.

THE "TIMES" ON THE ABOVE LETTER.

AN elaborate and closely reasoned letter of Mr. Justice Stephen, which we publish to-day, comes opportunely at a time when the return of the Viceroy to Calcutta gives notice that the final decision on Mr. Ilbert's Bill on Criminal Procedure must shortly be taken. It is now nine months since the scheme was first promulgated, and this long delay in dealing with it has not by any means produced, as was expected by the Government, a subsidence of the universal feeling against the measure which arose among all classes of the British community on its first announcement. The notion that the animosity with which it was received was a mere fancy of a susceptible population, that it was the result of futile apprehensions which would soon pass away, or of an unworthy pride of race which would vanish in shame at the first note of lofty moral rebuke, has been wholly disappointed, and the longer the measure has been considered the more general has been the condemnation passed upon it. To those who know the unwillingness of Indian officials to oppose or censure the Viceregal Government, which all of them are trained to respect and on which they must all depend for employment, fortune, and reputation, the answers of the Provincial Governments and other authorities of India must carry conviction of the demerits of the new legislation. The most important of these documents have been published in our columns, and it will have been seen that even those who do not actually condemn the Bill base their qualified assent to it not on any belief in its propriety or usefulness, but principally on some such reason as that, having once excited the expectations of the natives, it would not be expedient to draw back. Though every one who is not wholly opposed to the measure is counted among its supporters, only a small minority, and these occupied with regions hardly effected by the change, can be found to assent in any way. It is the perusal of these opinions which induces Mr. Justice Stephen once more to enter the field, and by an argument, the power and cohesiveness of which will be denied by none, to enforce the views which he presented in the Times several months ago. It is needless for us to enter into any analysis of his letter. We need only recommend it to all who are interested in one of the most important questions of principle that have ever marked our rule in India.

MR. R. STEWART ON THE SAME.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—I have read with much satisfaction the masterly letter of Mr. Justice Stephen on the Ilbert Bill which appeared in the Times of yesterday, and which cannot fail to have an important influence on the opinions on this subject of those Englishmen who take an interest in the position, difficulties, or prospects of their countrymen in India. Sir James Stephen when he writes that the different European committees, in 1872, "recognised the necessity which existed for providing more efficiently for the exercise of criminal jurisdiction over Europeans, and did not wish to oppose it, but that they thought that it should be exercised, as it had always been, by judges and magistrates who were themselves European British subjects" expresses with perfect exactness the views which I and my then colleague, Mr. Bullen Smith, held on the subject of the modifications of the Code of Criminal Procedure (so far as these related to Europeans) which were affected by the legislation of 1872, and he is entitled to say, not only that these were our views (a matter of small consequence) but also that, as we firmly believed, they were the only views which, so far as we had any representative capacity, we were warranted, on behalf of the European community, in upholding or in recommending as a basis for legislation. I think, too, that the history of the last eleven years sufficiently justifies the opinion that the Select Committee in what they recommended, and the Legislative Council in what they effected, correctly apprehended the views of their fellow countrymen, and adopted a wise and prudent course; as also that the present Government of India have either misapprehended or disregarded these views. I shall not repeat the arguments on this point, or on the general merits of the question, which have already been expressed, with a reasonableness, force, and vigour which should commend them to every candid mind, by Mr. Justice Stephen and others well qualified by character, position, and experience to offer their opinions; but I would say that, reasons of justice and policy towards Europeans apart, I think that the Government of India have made a serious and dangerous mistake, in the first place in introducing, and, in the next, in proceeding with, or at least in not withdrawing, proposals which have proved to be as objectionable to the English in British India as we believe them to be unnecessary for the administration of justice, matter of indifference to the great body of our native fellow-subjects, and calculated to fail in their object if that be the removal of the anomalies by which our position in India is, and must necessarily continue to be, surrounded, so long as we remain there in our present capacity. The matter is one which, emphatically, should have been left "well alone."—I am, sir, your obedient servant, late Member of the Legislative Council of India.

R. STEWART,

11, Chesham-place, S.W., Nov. 3.

FURTHER LOCAL OPINIONS ON THE BILL:

MR. STANHOPE AT EDINBURGH ON THE ILBERT BILL.

BEFORE I leave the subject of India, may I make one or two remarks on the subject of a Bill that is creating very great interest—I mean the Ilbert Bill—(cheers)—a Bill which has for its object the transfer of the jurisdiction in certain cases from Englishmen to natives? Now, a point I want, in the first place, to bring before you is this, that whatever the ultimate fate of that Bill may be, it is utterly impossible for one single moment to defend what I am afraid I must call the Jesuitical artifices by which Lord Ripon is attempting to recommend it to the people of this country. (Cheers.) That is a strong statement, and it requires absolute proof. (Cheers.) Will you bear with me if I tell you the various steps? When Lord Ripon first of all thought of introducing upon this point Radical principles into India, he felt the paramount importance of being able to tell the people of this country that the local Governments of India, to which, after all, we most especially look to preserve law and order in that country, approved of his proposals; and consequently, he circulated among those local Governments the suggestion that had been made for an alteration of the law in this respect; but it was only a fragment of the proposals; and even then it did not meet with anything like universal assent. Your distinguished fellow-countrymen, Mr. Grant Duff, told him very bluntly that he had better not stir the question at all. But he did stir the question; and having obtained the opinions of the local Governments on that point, he proceeded to introduce his Bill. Now, his Bill raised very much larger questions of policy, which had not been submitted to the local Governments and to the opinion of the Anglo-Indians; and he sent the Bill home to this country, coupled with the opinion of the local Governments, which had been given on a totally different proposal. Well, then, when he found that indignation was aroused in all quarters on account of the proposals he made in his Bill, he first of all tried to put all the responsibility on somebody else, and then he sent home a cooked telegram from India giving an account of the debate on these proposals, which would apparently show that his Council was in favour of it, while he gave a totally incorrect account of what passed at the Council. The next step was this. Popular indignation was aroused in India, and the local Governments represented that they had never been consulted at all upon the particular proposals of this Bill, and accordingly it became necessary to circulate it again. And it was circulated, and I believe I am right in saying that some of the answers to that circular reached the Government of India in the month of May last, while not only was all detail of those reports withheld from the judgment of Parliament, while it was possible for Parliament to discuss the proposal, but even at this present moment, months afterwards, we are not officially in possession of any one of these reports. But what does Lord Ripon do? He sends home two misleading telegrams. The first was intended to prove that a majority of the local Governments in India were in favour of his Bill, whereas it is abundantly clear that no one single local Government in India approved of the Bill as it stood and as it was presented to them. (Cheers.) And the second telegram was intended to convey the impression that the Anglo-Indians in India were seriously divided on the subject. It is exactly contrary to the fact. We now know perfectly well that the great mass of the Anglo-Indians of the country were resolutely opposed to the measure as it stood, and that many even of the natives advocated its withdrawal. (Cheers.) Now, I am making a serious charge against a responsible member of the present Government, and I make it with the very greatest reluctance, because we could perfectly well understand how anybody might have adopted this sort of system of artifice in order to conceal some trick of which he was ashamed, but that a responsible Governor-General of India, who is supposed to put forward a statesman-like measure for the purpose of dealing with the difficulties of that country, should have resorted to such shallow artifices passes my apprehension. (Cheers.) But upon the Bill itself there is no longer any doubt. It is abundantly clear that no administrative necessity demanded it. It cannot possibly confer any advantage on the natives, and on the other hand it is repugnant to all classes of the European population, and especially the working classes of India, and has increased to a large extent the race antagonism in that country, and it is calculated, we very much fear, if unhappily it is passed, to create the very gravest difficulties and dangers in that country. (Cheers.)

MR. DARLING AT EXETER ON THE ILBERT BILL.

BUT the Government asked the opinions of all the Provincial Governors, Judges, and high-placed officers throughout India. They have got those opinions. If they are against that Ilbert Bill, will they withdraw it? If they are honest they will. What is the good of their asking the opinion of these officers if, should it not suit them, it is to be put aside? It is an insult to go to a man competent to give advice, to ask him to advise you, and then, if you don't like it and to act according to it, to condemn his advice and put it on one side. (Cheers.) They did not find the Indian Judges and high officials so complainant as their Attorney-General and Solicitor-General; and we know now that in India the highest public officers advised conclusively against the Ilbert Bill. We know it despite the false and fraudulent telegrams, paid for by the Government; we know it in spite of an account of the debate in the Council of India, sent by Reuter at the special request of the Government—an account of the debate from which every speech against the Ilbert Bill was left out, so that you might be duped into thinking that there was but one opinion upon the Bill in the Council of India. It is useless to put the blame upon Reuter; the Government paid Reuter, and according to their own Corrupt Practices Act the culprit is the man who hires. (Cheers and laughter.)

THE ILBERT BILL.

["NORTH STAR."]

It is an undisputed fact that the Ilbert Bill is most hotly supported by those amongst us who know least of India, and opposed by men who are practically acquainted with that empire's wants. This, in itself, is a damaging fact as regards Lord Ripon's proposal; the home pleas in its favour being those grandly-abstract ones about "justice," "freedom," and "progress," which Liberal speakers are wont to substitute for the actualities of daily life, even on subjects where the sham is at once seen through. One little circumstance in connection with this subject, as showing the irritation it has caused amongst the English in India, without any compensatory result from the other side—for we need scarcely remind our readers that "the people of India" is a meaningless phrase, purposely used in this controversy to mislead—is wired by the Calcutta correspondent of the Times. The ceremonies to be observed on the occasion of the arrival of the Viceroy in Calcutta (he says) omit the usual order directing the Volunteers to furnish a guard of honour at Government House. This omission is said to be due to a belief on the part of the authorities that the Volunteers would refuse to turn out, for when certain companies were sounded on the subject, they expressed that intention. This may be taken as a straw which shows how the current runs. And all this unrest and excitement is for—what? For a Bill so whittled-away (its English advocates assert), that it will really have very little effect, and take many years even to produce that! Why couldn't Lord Ripon have let well alone?

THE ILBERT BILL.

Mr. WILLIAM SIM, late of the Madras Civil Service, has written an able letter, from which we extract the following.—

"When a change in any long-established custom is first proposed, the questions that naturally arise are:—Whether the change is necessary? And if so, whether the present is a fit and proper time to carry it into effect?

"Let us take the necessity of the Bill into consideration. It is a Bill to give certain native magistrates powers to summon, try, and, if necessary, convict Europeans brought before them charged with any offence. Up to the present time it has always been the privilege of Europeans to be tried in courts presided over by a European magistrate or judge. This privilege, almost the only one still accorded to Europeans in India, is highly prized, and naturally so. It has never been objected to by the natives themselves, who fail to see any advantage that they can gain by the increased power given to the native magistracy over Europeans. It matters nothing to them whether the European is tried by a native or by a European magistrate.

"A great deal has been said about doing away with all distinctions of creed and colour and class privilege, as one of the reasons for the Bill? but are the supporters of the Ilbert Bill prepared to carry this into effect as regards the natives themselves? Are they prepared to suggest that the many privileges that the natives enjoy under British rule are to be swept away? Are Brahmins, Soodias, and Pariahs all to be placed on the same footing? Are Hindoo and Mahomedan laws to be assimilated? Are native ladies to be compelled to appear in open court? If they are not prepared to propose all this, why should the same privilege that the European enjoys be taken away, merely to suit the sentimental caprice of a few so-called Reformers? Some people seem to have an idea that there are only two races in India—the Europeans and natives—and quite overlook the fact that the latter are divided into many castes and religions, none of which can be joined together, and every one of which acts and feels in a perfectly different manner. The great hold that the British authority has over all the others is its moral force; and surely it cannot add to that moral force to lower the position of Europeans in native estimation, and permit the possibility of a European lady being summoned and tried by a native magistrate in open court, when a native lady is permitted to give her evidence behind a purdah or screen.

I will not allude to the moral degradation that such an event would produce.

"India, owing to its immense extent and the diversity of its races, must be governed by one rule, superior in every way to all others, and if the European, which is at present the governing power, is set on one side, which of the native powers is to take its place? Certainly not the high-educated Bengalee; and yet the Bengalee Baboos are the men who are being petted and pampered, and who are so loud in their support of the proposed Bill. Place the British rule, capable though it may be of improvement, on one side, and how long will it be before the whole country is overrun by the Sikhs, Mahrattas, and other warlike tribes? And how long before the old state of anarchy and confusion which existed 134 years ago is reproduced? Verily, the last state of our Indian Empire will be worse than the first.

"The supporters of the Bill contend that it is a 'very small matter,' and that the outcry against it is a 'mere nothing.' So was the cloud no bigger than a man's hand, but it foretold surely what was to happen; and never was there greater occasion to watch the cloud that appears on our Eastern horizon more carefully than at present; for already has a feeling of distrust and class animosity arisen—worse, aye much worse, than ever existed before the Indian Mutiny. Administrative wisdom is not to be picked up in a high school, and requires something more than a perfect knowledge of the English language and the affix of 'Esquire' to one's name!" —(From the Exeter and Plymouth Gazette of Friday, 19th Oct., 1883.)

THE MEETING OF THE PLANTERS OF JOREHAT AGAINST THE RENT BILL.

JOREHAT, OCT. 2.

A PUBLIC meeting of the European community was held at Cinnamara on Oct. 1; Mr. J. Huttman being in the chair, when the following resolution was unanimously passed:—"That in the opinion of this meeting, some of the provisions of the proposed Rent Law for the Assam Valley are highly prejudicial to the interests of both the European and Native communities, and that a memorial embodying the views expressed at this meeting be submitted to the Chief Commissioner."

The following are the main points objected to:—First, the right of occupancy accruing in three years, instead of twelve, as at present; second, the commutation of rent in produce to money not being adjusted in reference to the market value of the produce; third, restriction of the rate of rent even in respect of ordinary tenants to double the revenue rates, thereby taking away the right of free contract; fourth, the withdrawal of the power of ejectment in regard to ordinary tenants.—Englishman.

WHAT MR. ROY SAYS.

THERE is a young Hindu now sojourning in New York City, who has made some interesting statements about the possible future of the 250,000,000 people who inhabit the peninsula of Hindustan. Amrita Lal Roy is a graduate of the College of Calcutta, and has studied medicine in Edinburgh. Although in appearance almost a black man, he is a very intelligent and cultivated gentleman. He states that all classes of Hindus detest their British rulers. A revolt cannot be far distant, and when it takes place, it will be found that the people are practically unanimous in preferring Native rule to foreign domination. Of the £60,000,000 annually raised by taxation in India, but little over £20,000,000 is expended for the Hindus themselves. Nearly £40,000,000 is distributed among English military and civil officers, who are in India simply to keep the country in subjection. In other words, that vast sum is a tribute annually paid by the East Indians to their conquerors. There is scarcely any middle class of Native Hindus. The Englishman is the banker and the merchant. Hence the native is cut off from all honourable and lucrative pursuits. He cannot be a high officer of the army. The Englishman also almost monopolises the Civil Service; the higher judges are all imported. There are some few rich native landowners. The Hindus have, however, their own physicians and lawyers; but the vast mass of the people labour continuously for the merest pittance. Now, the Hindus are quick-witted and intelligent; indeed, their language shows them to be a variation of the Caucasian race. They keenly realise the humiliating position which they occupy; and are only waiting for an opportunity to drive the handful of foreign invaders from the soil. Mr. Roy further says that the contact with Europeans has unsettled the belief of the educated classes in the Brahminical faith. But still there are practically but very few Christians in Hindustan. The educated and intelligent are what is known as "agnostics" here in the Western world; in other words, they do not believe in anything. This, however, does not much trouble the priestly class, who pay little attention to religious philosophies or creeds. Brahminism is a secular religion, and aims only to order the lives of its votaries. It instructs the people as to what they shall do in their social and family relations.

The 1st Sikhs from Abbottabad are to march almost at once for Dera Ismail Khan, to supply the escort of the survey party which, under Major Holdich, R.E., explores the Takht-i-Suliman, at the end of this month.

MAIL NEWS.

H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught will be received in Bombay as a member of the Royal Family, but after taking up his command he will only receive a salute according to his military rank.

H. E. the Viceroy and party left Simla on Oct. 17 on his tour. His Excellency is timed to arrive in Calcutta on Dec. 1. The Viceregal party arrived at Lahore at noon on Oct. 18. There were very few spectators present at the station to meet his Excellency.

The programme of the arrangements for the Viceroy's arrival in Calcutta has been published. No reference is made in the programme to the volunteers, who usually form a guard of honour on the occasion of Viceregal arrivals.

His Excellency the Governor of Bombay will remain at Mahabaleshwar till the middle of the present month, when he will go to Bombay to receive the Duke and Duchess of Connaught.

Among the distinguished visitors invited by the Government of India to Calcutta during the Exhibition are the Governor-General of Portuguese India and the Governor of Pondicherry. They will be the guests of the Viceroy during their stay there. The newly appointed coadjutor Bishop of Goa will also visit Calcutta about the beginning of December.

Sir Auckland Colvin, the new Finance Minister, has been appointed a Companion of the Order of the Indian Empire.

An elderly East Indian woman named Maria Burbridge was murdered at Bangalore on Oct. 10, under circumstances of horrible brutality. It is suspected from the manner in which death was caused, and from other circumstances, that the murderers were natives.

During the celebration of the Mahomedan festival, known as the Buckri Eed, at Delhi, on Oct. 13, a serious disturbance took place between the Hindoos and the Mahomedans. Four men were injured, and the police were obliged to occupy the city in force.

In Bombay, on Oct. 13, a similar disturbance was at one time imminent, but owing to the firm conduct of the police, the affair terminated without any serious consequences.

A serious affray is said to have occurred between the police and some sepoys in the cantonment at Cuttack some days ago, in which an inspector and some constables were severely beaten.

The brother of General Faz Mahomed and the Ghilzai Chief, who is inimical to the Ameer, has arrived in British territory from the Afreedee country; and it is believed that he will be followed by his brother and other Ghilzais, if a hospitable reception by the British be assured him.

News has been received in Simla of the arrival of the Persian Envoy at Cabul.

A frontier rumour says that the object of the Persian mission is to persuade the Ameer Abdul Rahman to divide his kingdom with Ayub Khan; Abdul Rahman taking Balk and Herat, and Ayub Cabul and Kandahar. The impression that this is intended prevails in Cabul.

Some important correspondence regarding the rates charged for the carriage of grain on Indian railways has been published.

The Government of India has published a resolution detailing the changes which it is proposed to introduce into the working of the Telegraph Department. The main feature of the scheme is that every post office will be constituted a receiving office for inland telegrams.

The Government of India, in replying to the memorial of the Kurrachee Chamber of Commerce regarding the mail service from Bombay to that port, have declined to interfere with the resolution previously passed on the subject.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

(From the Bombay Gazette of Oct. 19.)

Brigadier Generals Oldershaw, C.B., and S. de B. Edwards, C.B., and Major H. Mellis have been permitted to return to duty.

Colonel Richard Barter, C.B., who obtains a good-service pension in the room of Colonel R. Murray (succeeded to colonel allowance) distinguished himself at the siege of Delhi and in the campaign which followed, and was badly wounded at the action of Badli-ka-Serai. He also assisted at the battle of Ahmed-Khel in the late Afghan war.

Colonel O. B. Stokes, R.A., has resumed command of the Allahabad station, on return from leave.

Colonel P. W. L'Estrange, R.A., having returned to Secunderabad on being relieved by General Ellis from commanding the Nagpore Force, resumes command of the R.A.H.S. Force.

Colonel G. Briggs, Madras Staff Corps, Deputy Judge Advocate-General, has obtained ninety days' privilege leave.

Lieut. Col. Craster, R.A., succeeds to the command of the Dalhousie Hill Depot, vice Col. Wyllie, who vacates on the 16th instant, on being placed on half pay.

Lieut. Col. Parry, 2nd Cheshire Regiment, proceeds home on fifteen months' leave. Surg. Major J. G. Grant, A.M.D., retires from the service.

Lieut. Col. C. R. Mathews, of the Judge Advocate's Department, who went home in April last year, has obtained a second extension of six months, thus making two years in all, so that he will not return till next April, when, in all probability he will be posted to his old circle, Sirhind and Lahore, in the place of Major M. Clementi, who, it is expected, will be transferred to Simla as deputy judge advocate, vice Col. Nedham, who will then have over thirty-nine years' service to his credit, and will be close on fifty-nine years of age.

Major J. C. Stockley, and Captain J. A. R. Bell, Army Pay Department, who are expected out shortly, have been posted as paymaster of the 2nd Royal Lancaster and 2nd Gloucestershire regiments, respectively.

It is expected that Major Hayland, 1st Bombay Lancers, will get the command of that regiment in the place of Colonel Anderson, transferred to the 2nd Lancers.

Major R. J. Crawford, B. Staff Corps, is promoted to Lieutenant Colonel on completion of twenty-six years' service.

Major Nesbitt, 1st West Riding Regiment, has been granted fifteen months' leave to England.

The Madras Government, on the recommendation of His Excellency the Commander in Chief, has sanctioned the temporary employment of the following officers for survey duty at Bangalore in connection with the approaching camp of exercise:—Captain Henry, R.E., deputy assistant quartermaster general, Ceded District; Captain Hornsby, Staff Corps, officiating deputy assistant quartermaster general, Western District; Lieut. H. Porter, 2nd Battalion Royal Fusiliers.

Brigade Surgeon Joynt, who lately returned from furlough, will probably remain at Poona on general duty for the present.

Brigade Surgeon Henry King and Veterinary Surgeon George Western have both retired from the Madras Army.

Riding Master F. Shearine, 12th Lancers, has been granted nine months' subsidiary leave on medical certificate.

Lieutenants R. L. Retallack, East Kent, and J. Govan, 1st Norfolk, have resigned their probationers' appointment in the Bombay Staff Corps, and are attached to the 2nd North Staffordshire and 2nd Norfolk Regiments, respectively.

The following postings have been made:—Lieutenant Blackburn, East Kent, Major Dixon, Royal Irish Regiment, Major Seppings, South Yorkshire, and Captain Kelly, Border Regiment to the 1st battalions of their respective regiments; and Major Anstruther, Manchester, and Major Bowles, Derbyshire Regiments, to the 2nd battalions of their regiments.

Surgeon R. H. S. Sawyer, A.M.D., takes medical charge of the Allahabad Rest Camp, in addition to his other duties.

Lieutenant G. H. Loch, lately employed in the Commissariat Department, has been appointed officiating Wing Officer in the 3rd Gorkhas.

The following transfers of Royal Artillery officers have been made:—Lieutenant G. R. U. Cooke, from Gwalior to Meerut, to join I. Battery 4th Brigade; Lieutenant A. M. Balfour, from Peshawar to Dinapore, to join I. Battery 3rd Brigade; Lieutenant C. A. Williams, from Allahabad to Deesa, to join H. Battery 2nd Brigade; and Lieutenant C. T. Bell, from Campbellpore to Neemach, to join B. Battery 2nd Brigade.

The Bombay correspondent of the Pioneer is given to understand that as yet it is by no means settled that the Duke of Connaught will succeed General Hardinge as Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army. "It is a pity that General Hardinge's term of office cannot be extended, as he has done much for the local army, and his strict sense of justice has made him very popular in the service. Socially, also, he has done his duty with great acceptance."

The 1st Bombay Lancers, who go to Quetta, have been ordered to supply themselves with poshteens in lieu of wadded coats, the latter being pronounced unsuited to cavalry.

A court-martial was lately held to try a native officer of the 10th Bombay N.L.I., Quartermaster Luximon Arrayker, on several charges of embezzling regimental funds. The offences extended over a long period, from July, 1882, to Aug. 1883. He was convicted, ordered to be dismissed with ignominy, struck off the roll of his regiment, and handed over to the civil power to undergo two years' imprisonment with hard labour.

It is stated to have been ruled that officers of the Royal Engineers appointed to the Submarine Mining Service and posted as assistant engineers, 2nd grade, P.W.D., are to be viewed as supernumeraries, and will be brought upon the effective lists by promotion in succession to vacancies occurring in the sanctioned scale of Royal Engineers on each list.

The Secretary of State for India has directed that in allotting "non-entitled" passages in troopships, preference is to be given to those applicants who have not already enjoyed the privilege, other claims being fairly equal.

It has been decided to withdraw the detachment of British Infantry stationed at Moradabad, which has hitherto been furnished from Bareilly. The arrangement comes into force after the departure of the regiment now quartered at Bareilly in the course of the present relief season.

Nos. 7 Battery London Division and 8 Battery Eastern Division, R.A., do not now proceed to Aden in the I. G. S. Clive on the 20th inst. That ship will convey the whole of the 4th N. L. to Aden, instead of a wing, as was originally intended. She will return from Aden with the 22nd N. L., one wing of which will be landed at Bombay, and the other at Vitoria.

The Indian Government sailing ship Czarewitch Capt. W. C. Hotham, arrived in Bombay harbour on Friday from Karachi, which port she left on the 9th instant in tow of the Indian Government steamer Dagmar, Capt. Haveland. There were on board Capt. and Mrs. W. Fuller and five servants, sub assistant commissary general, and one native commissariat inspector. She will sail for Karachi on the 15th instant in tow of the Dagmar, with six European officers, ten native officers, 390 rank and file, eighty-one followers, and six horses of the left wing and headquarters of the 1st Regiment, Madras Pioneers. The following are the names of officers:—Col. H. S. Robinson, Major E. H. Eyre, Surg. Major E. Fawcett, Lieut. H. D. Keary, Lieut. R. A. Ritherdow, and Lieut. R. M. Raizey. The following details will also embark:—Captain Hadden, R.A., Lieut. Bennett, three followers, and one horse of the 2nd Grenadiers N. L., and nineteen men of the Medical Department, &c. The left wing and headquarters will arrive from Poona on the 15th instant by a special train, and will embark from Sassoon Dock.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1883.

THE EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

We give in a Special Supplement to-day a full report of the proceedings at the very important meeting of the East India Association last Wednesday, when Lord Ripon's confiscatory land-policy in Bengal was under consideration. The special value of the discussions of this association, when all shades of political opinion are allowed a full and attentive hearing, is rapidly becoming more and more generally recognised, as a wider and deeper interest in the affairs of our great Eastern dependency is developed among thoughtful men at home. The admirable summaries of the speeches delivered last Wednesday, that appeared in the Times and most of the leading London and provincial papers, strikingly exemplify the remarkable growth of English interest, of late years, in important Indian questions—even when they are concerned with subjects that appeal to the popular imagination so faintly as must unfortunately always be the case with questions affecting land. The East India Association may be congratulated on the success which has attended its efforts to direct the attention of the English public to current land legislation in India. Were it not for such efforts as that of last Wednesday, that proposed legislation, though fraught with the most tremendous consequences to the people of Bengal, might easily have been pushed through—under cover, as Lord Stanley of Alderley aptly remarked, of the dust raised by the Ilbert Bill—and no one in this country, except a few specialists, would ever have known or cared about the disastrous probabilities involved in it.

The Times, and most of the other journals that referred to the Anglo-Indian Meeting of Wednesday, noticed the important fact that the sense of the meeting was unmistakably hostile to the Tenancy Bill. Even the one or two speakers who attempted to defend this unfortunate measure did so apparently as much on the ground that it owes its existence to the good and gifted beings whose names will be associated with it, Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert, as for any practical advantage that may be expected from it. And they seemed to hope more from the amendments that are foreseen by the prophetic eye of faith, than from the Bill as it now stands; much like the Irishman who was proud of his coat, mainly for the beauty of the patches upon it.

We have already dwelt, in these columns, on many of the more flagrant of those mistakes in the Bill, which were pointed out last Wednesday by Mr. Roper Lethbridge, Lord Stanley of Alderley, Mr. Stewart Reid, Mr. Chapman, Mr. Arathoon, and Mr. Dacosta, and in the letters which were read from Mr. C. T. Buckland and Mr. Tayler. The fact that former members of the Boards of Revenue both of Bengal and of the North Western Provinces—men who have themselves been for years at the head of the revenue administration of those provinces, and whose personal experience and knowledge of the points at issue are, and must be, absolutely unsurpassed among living Anglo-Indian officials—should have felt it their duty to come forward in their English retirement, to denounce the shameful measure of spoliation that is now contemplated by the Government of India, is a fact that can hardly fail to have its due weight with Lord Ripon. The Viceroy must feel that here at home the judgment of those who have filled high administrative posts in India is formed with a calm deliberation and an absence of bias, that give it a special value and authority; and we can hardly doubt that the opinion of such able and experienced officials as those ex-members of the Boards of Revenue—coinciding as it does with the views of the large majority of the district officers of Bengal who have been consulted by the Government—must prove fatal to this ill-judged and ill-timed measure.

We regret to observe that the Daily News of Saturday acts on its usual principle, that no measure of a Liberal Viceroy is to be found fault with. It attempts to defend the Tenancy Bill, first by misrepresenting its scope, and secondly by imitating the Irishman, and declaring that many of the provisions of the Bill are "little more than suggestions, the value of which will be tested by the reports which are now reaching the Supreme Government, and which will be considered after the Viceroy's arrival next November" (?—the date of the article is Nov. 3, 1883!) "at Calcutta." We trust that this last announcement is an authoritative one; and that Lord Ripon has decided to pay more respect to the advice of the "eyes and ears" of the Government in the matter of this Land Bill, than he has shown any sign of doing in other matters.

We have said that the Daily News misrepresents the scope of the Bill. This is especially the case in regard to the first of the three Fs., Fixity of tenure—which the Daily News, oddly enough, calls "free tenure." Under this head our contemporary, professing to describe the operation of the proposed law, actually describes that of the existing law under Act x. of 1859, and Act viii. of 1869! It says "Twelve years' occupation, up to the beginning of last March, qualifies them as occupiers." So much for the knowledge and intelligence with which Radical doctrinaires take upon themselves to advise the Indian Government on questions that are literally matters of life and death to millions of our Indian fellow-subjects!

The Saturday Review this week devotes no less than two entire articles—one on "The Bengal Rent Bill," the other a review of the famous "Fifth Report"—to the consideration of the subject of last Wednesday's meeting. The article on the Rent Bill itself is mainly devoted to an exposition of the absurd theories and crudities of one "Baboo Abhay Charan Dass"—who calls himself a "ryot," but whom internal evidence reveals as an ambitious young gentleman of the student class, to whom a "little knowledge" has, as usual, proved "a dangerous thing." The Reviewer also develops the suggestion of Lord Stanley of Alderley, that the "Machiavellian policy" of the Government of India or some of its underlings has obscured the very important issues raised by this Bill under the cloak of the all-engrossing Ilbert Bill. It is needless to tell Anglo-Indian readers that the Saturday Review writes with a knowledge of the subject very different from that manifested by the Daily News. It is, therefore, the more to be regretted that the Reviewer betrays a tendency now and then to echo the parrot-cries of some of the anti-landlord Bengali agitators about the alleged "oppressions" of the zemindars. We hold that it is impossible to read the evidence on this subject presented by Mr. Roper Lethbridge in his paper, without coming to the conclusion that this cry is simply and absolutely a figment of the imagination of the said agitators and some of their too-credulous philanthropical disciples. And it is a cruel thing that such a cry—based on no reasonable grounds, and positively contradicted, not only by the Zemindars themselves and their friends, but also by such testimony as that of Sir Ashley Eden, Sir Richard Temple, and every other Bengal authority—should be repeated in this country, to justify the ruin of a large and loyal class of Her Majesty's Indian subjects, by writers whose knowledge of the subject is evidently sufficient, if only it be diligently used and applied, to enable them to appreciate the utter hollowness of the grounds that have been alleged for these false charges.

MR. JUSTICE STEPHEN CRUSHES THE ILBERT BILL.

THE Echo and other Radical papers have called on a Radical Government to "crush" the Anglo-Indians; and Mr. Gladstone has complied with the amiable request, by his famous "spirit of ascendancy" speech in Parliament, and by backing up Lord Ripon's crude despotism. Might is for the moment triumphant over Right; the doctrinaires of the Indian Government are enabled to trample on the most deeply-cherished sentiment of the English in India, by the brute force of Mr. Gladstone's majority in the House of Commons. But that deeply-wronged community may fairly derive some consolation from the consideration that the righteousness of its cause has been proved by Mr. Justice Stephen, in the masterly letters to the Times, one of which we reproduce in another column (the other will appear next week), with absolutely conclusive force; and all the world will feel that if Lord Ripon and Mr. Gladstone persist in thrusting the wicked measure on an unhappy land, after these unanswerable letters of Sir James Stephen, and after the whole weight of official evidence has declared against the Bill, our rulers will most undoubtedly be sinning against the clearest light and the fullest knowledge. Mr. Justice Stephen analyses with incomparable skill and lucidity the official and local reports, that have lately appeared in India, and that ought long ago to have been published by the Government in England. He brings out, with extraordinary force, the cruel and vindictive character of the proposed legislation; by showing beyond possibility of further question, how real and well-grounded are the fears entertained by the non-official European community, how utterly defenceless they are when betrayed by their natural protectors, and how solid are the foundations of justice and right on which they base their claim to the small but all-important safeguard of which Lord Ripon wishes to deprive them. The Viceroy has been warned by the experience and practical knowledge of the whole Civil Service of India, and by the loyal and magnanimous advice of the ablest Native Statesmen, such as Sir Madhava Rao, and Sir Dinkar Rao, of the terrible mistake into which he is being hurried by a foolish and selfish vanity; and now Mr. Justice Stephen's letters demolish the last pitiful excuse that Lord Ripon is able to offer to his own conscience in the matter, by exposing not only the practical folly, but even the logical falseness, of the sentimental theories of the doctrinaires.

HOME NEWS.

GOOD-SERVICE PENSION.—Lieut.-Col. and Brevet-Col. Thomas W. Pierce, Bombay Staff Corps, has been awarded an Indian good-service pension, vacated by Deputy-Surgeon-General J. Lumsdaine, Bombay Medical Service, on his retirement.

H.M.'s TROOPSHIPS.—The Indian troopship Crocodile, which is undergoing extensive repairs at Portsmouth, is ordered to be completed as early as possible, and will be commissioned in January. She will not be required for the ordinary Indian reliefs during the present season, but it is understood that her services will be required to bring home some of the regiments in Egypt.

MEDICAL WOMEN FOR INDIA.—In his observations at the meeting held on Monday week, for the purpose of considering the usefulness of medical women in India, a report of which appeared in our last issue, Mr. Kittredge, of Bombay, stated that the authorities of the Bombay University had conceded to females the right of taking the same medical degree which men might take.

OBITUARY.—Major General George Augustus Brown, lately in command of the 38th Regiment of Bengal Native Infantry, died on Oct. 27, at Cheltenham. He was the youngest son of Major John Harman Brown, of the same place, a magistrate and deputy lieutenant for Shropshire, formerly of the 52nd and 90th Regiment, and aide-de-camp to Lord Clive, Governor of Madras. The deceased General entered the army in 1846, and obtained a lieutenancy in 1851. He served with the expedition on the Eusofzie border in 1858, and was present at the destruction of Chingalee and Sittana, and he also commanded the present 1st Bengal Native Infantry, at the attack on Sittana and until the return of the force. He was promoted to a captaincy in 1859, became major in 1866, lieutenant colonel in 1872, colonel in 1877, and major general in 1881.

R.A. OFFICERS FOR SHOEBOURNNESS.—It has been officially notified in India that the following officers of Royal Artillery will come to England this season for the purpose of going through a course of instruction at the School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness:—Capt. Murchison, No. 8 Battery 1st Brigade Northern Division; Lieut. F. E. Sinclair, O Battery 1st Brigade; Lieut. E. W. Briscoe, E Battery 4th Brigade; Lieut. M. F. Fegen, F Battery 4th Brigade; Lieut. P. B. Taylor, N Battery 3d Brigade; and Lieut. J. T. Johnston, M Battery 3d Brigade. The above officers will be required to join at Shoeburyness to commence their studies, in conjunction with a similar number of officers from brigades on home service, on the 1st of January next.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—Tenders for Rs.25,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—in bills on Calcutta, Rs.25,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d.; in telegraphic transfers, on Calcutta, Rs. 27,00,000, at an average rate of Rs. 7½d.; or a total of Rs. 27,25,000. Tenders for bills at Rs. 7½d. and telegraphic transfers at Rs. 7 17-32d. will receive in full. Subsequently, bills for Rs. 1,40,000 on Bombay were sold at Rs. 7½d. per rupee. Between April 1 and Tuesday night the total amount of remittances disposed of reached Rs. 10,73,70,150, and realised £8,708,011.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT.—A Reuter's telegram dated Port Said, Nov. 8, says:—"The Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived here to-day. Their Royal Highnesses were received by Sir Evelyn Baring, Lieutenant-General Stephenson, and Zulficar Pasha, the Court Chamberlain. The Duke and Duchess continued their voyage through the Canal. His Royal Highness declining an invitation from the Khedive to visit Cairo."

INDIAN APPEAL CASES.—In the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council yesterday, the case of Ram Kirpal Shukul v. Rup Kuari was before their lordships. This was an appeal from a decision of a Divisional Bench of the High Court of the North West Provinces of India of Aug. 10, 1880, reversing judgments of the judge and the subordinate judge of Gorakhpur. Mr. Davey, Q.C., and Mr. W. Raikes were counsel for the appellant; Mr. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the respondent. The question in dispute was as to whether the appellant was entitled or not to the mesne profits of a certain village, which were claimed by him in a suit instituted in May, 1861; and the main points argued were as to the construction and legal effect of a decree of the Sudder Court passed in that suit on May 3, 1864, and as to whether the principles of estoppel and the law of res judicata did or did not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree. Their lordships, at the close of the arguments, reserved judgment.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson report that our markets are without activity, the state of foreign political affairs and the cotton failures in Liverpool announced this week having increased the quiet tone so long prevalent. Quotations of imported produce have not, however, experienced further depression, and transactions are of modern extent at the very low rates recently established. Common kinds of coffee are firmer, Rio again showed a tendency to improvement in response to the Brazilian and American advices. Plantation Ceylon remains unsettled, with sales at irregular and easier rates. Other descriptions, including East India, are about the same as last quoted, except Mysore, which sold under valuations. There is the same pressure to sell China tea by auction as for many weeks past, and Congous have found buyers at current low rates. Indian teas, although in large supply, close with a firm tone, fine to finest grades are rather dearer; other sorts fully maintained. Considerable business is reported in Bengal rice at about 6d. per cwt. recovery. For Burmah to arrive there is a quiet market. Beet sugar is again lower, and cane-grown does not show any change for the better in the absence of speculation. A small shipment of Ceylon cocoa brought high prices. At the spice sales a few parcels of cinnamon sold without further alteration in value, but a fine mark had to be withdrawn. Zanzibar cloves are rather better, with diminished supplies offering and large deliveries. White and black pepper cannot be sold on previous terms.

COFFEE.—Most of the coffee at auction to-day was bought in. 40 casks 16 barrels and bags plantation Ceylon sold—middling at 76s. to 79s.; good middling to rather bold at 80s. to 89s. 209 cases 379 bags East India chiefly withdrawn.

RICE.—Bengal firm at yesterday's advance.

PEPPER.—Black quiet. Business done in Singapore white at 10½ per lb.

JUTE.—A limited demand at late quotations.

FRIDAY EVENING.

TEA.—The auctions of Indian tea held this week have comprised 22,000 packages, and the large supply and low rates having attracted buyers, nearly the whole has been disposed of at steady prices for all good descriptions, while for the finest lines advanced quotations have been obtained; weak and common descriptions, on the other hand show ½d. decline. The October deliveries reached a total of 5,662,000lb., the heaviest on record, and half-a-million lb. in excess of last year's.

COFFEE is quiet, and at the public sales prices were rather easier. Plantation Ceylon in many cases is lower for the week. Rio firm. To-day 204 casks 219 barrels and bags of the former mostly sold—low to good middling, 72s. to 83s.; fine middling to bold, 85s. to 101s. 524 bags East India, 72s. 6d. to 84s.; bold, 86s. to 91s.; small in proportion.

RICE.—An extensive business in Bengal at 6d. to 9d. advance on the week.

THE GARBLED TELEGRAMS.

("INDIAN DAILY NEWS.")

AN attempt has been made in a somewhat grotesque fashion to exculpate the Government and the head of the Government, and to lay the blame upon those unhappy scapegoats—the departmental departments—or to be more correct in our reference—the "Imperial Departments." But we believe that in cases of forgery the law assumes the guilt of the person who benefits by the forgery, and who cannot give a reasonable defence of the charge. This is a good rule by which to judge in such matters as garbled reports and garbled telegrams. Who benefited for the moment by the garbled telegram of 9th March last? That, by the way, like this more recent telegram, messing the opinions on the Liberty Bill, was officially stated to be the result of an error in transmission; that is, the worst mistake in a wholly erroneous message. The same excuse is again put forward, but with the short-sightedness of leaving half the arithmetic of the message in its native ugliness. Who benefited in March, and who benefited in September by the mistakes of these telegrams? Departments are never convicted of over-zeal. When they do exhibit such a quality, it is invariably found that they have been spurred to the exhibition. Indian departments are not careful about

English opinion, and it is no part of their work or their duty to supply pabulum to London newspapers, or opinions ready-made to news agencies. When they undertake duties of this sort, they are a long way beyond their last, and are evidently serving purposes of which they know nothing, and obeying impulses conveyed to them from above. There is no department in India interested in securing in London a priority of circulation for the views of the Government. But Lord Ripon is interested, and indeed is the only person in India who would gain anything whatsoever from such a telegram. He would have the first hearing for his policy, and would leave to his opponents the very difficult task of undoing and erasing the effect of first impressions. In such a population as that of England, it is very hard to overtake an untruth. But what we have to consider is that on two distinct occasions false impressions about the Ilbert Bill have been conveyed to the minds of the people of England. They were, in the first instance, led to believe that the debate of March 9 was a distinct success to the Government; whereas it was so distinctly the reverse that a wise Government would have dropped the Bill then and there, without further ado. In the second instance, they have been led to believe—after having been repeatedly told by the organs of the European community—that the official vote was in favour of the Bill, and led to believe, on apparently the best authority, that the official vote is overwhelmingly in favour of Lord Ripon's policy. Now, here again, Lord Ripon alone presses this measure; he alone is interested in forcing it on the country; he alone would benefit by any wrong impression created in England. The telegram was the more vicious because it was a surprise. It convicted the English community in India of misrepresentations, and it did them, therefore, a very great deal more mischief than by merely supporting the Government view. Fortunately, in both cases, the detection has followed close upon the offence; but that is a happy accident, and does not affect the offender, or the motives which actuated him. Of course, the Government could not act without the "departments;" but so long as the departments only register the will of the Government, so long the responsibility must rest with the Government. It is a trifling with common sense to hold up Lord Ripon as "light," and those terrible "departments" as the worst possible kind of "darkness;" for light and darkness cannot exist together, and departments are merely reflecting media for whatever may be above them. The fact is, for the last six months the Government of India has been trying to snatch a verdict about the Ilbert Bill. We take it that the movement of the Radical Clubs is all of a piece with the manipulation of the telegrams; but there can be no doubt that Lord Ripon has introduced a measure which is uncalled for, premature, inopportune, unworkable—a measure which the natives do not care for, and which the Europeans detest. But his Lordship has to justify theory against the ways of humanity. He has to endeavour a Utopia where he ought to administer an empire; and the result is that his appeal to opinion has shown that no man ever made a mistake of the same proportions who knew so little of what he was doing.

The votes given on the Bill by those consulted, who are not by any means all officials, conclusively show this. Going back to our lists of Monday last, we have the following:—

| FOR THE BILL.         |          |        |
|-----------------------|----------|--------|
| Europeans.            | Natives. | Total. |
| 11                    | 29       | 40     |
| FOR ITS MODIFICATION. |          |        |
| Europeans.            | Natives. | Total. |
| 60                    | 11       | 71     |
| FOR ITS WITHDRAWAL.   |          |        |
| Europeans.            | Natives. | Total. |
| 142                   | 10       | 152    |
| 213                   | 50       | 263    |

Now, amongst the natives who would vote for the Bill, there is no such name as that of Sir T. Madhava Rao.

We will now divide the native supporters of the Bill according to their Presidencies.

|                         |     |     |    |
|-------------------------|-----|-----|----|
| Bengal                  | ... | ... | 15 |
| Madras                  | ... | ... | 7  |
| Bombay                  | ... | ... | 4  |
| The Punjab              | ... | ... | 2  |
| North-Western Provinces | ... | ... | 1  |
|                         |     |     | 29 |

Looking at them again according to faith, we have twenty-one Hindoos, seven Mahomedans, and one Parsee. If we divide the natives who would modify the Bill, we have then the following result:—

|            |     |     |    |
|------------|-----|-----|----|
| Bengal     | ... | ... | 3  |
| Bombay     | ... | ... | 4  |
| Madras     | ... | ... | 1  |
| The Punjab | ... | ... | 3  |
|            |     |     | 11 |

Of these, two are only Mahomedans, two Parsees, and seven Hindoos. The natives who would withdraw the Bill are:—

|        |     |     |    |
|--------|-----|-----|----|
| Bengal | ... | ... | 2  |
| Behar  | ... | ... | 5  |
| Madras | ... | ... | 2  |

Of these, one would appear to be a Parsee, four Mahomedans, and five Hindus. We see, therefore, that an analysis of the native vote shows that the strongest support comes from Bengal, and that it is in the main a Hindu support. The Mahomedan vote is so divided as practically to be neutralised. When we find, however, that out of fifty natives, twenty-one are either opposed to the Bill or in favour of its modification, against twenty-nine wholly in favour of it; and when, again, of these twenty-nine, fifteen—that is, more than half, belong to one province, representing one-third of the population of British India, and representing, moreover, the least manly of all the races in India, the folly which would convey to England a false impression of opinion in India, needs to be sheltered behind something very much more effective than "departments."

THE ILBERT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ENGLISHMAN."

SIR,—It has been suggested that, regarding Lord Ripon in the light of the Queen's representative, the public should avoid any outward or personal demonstration of disrespect for him because of the principles on which he administers this country, but it appears to me that there is a fallacy in the proposition. I would suggest that it is our duty to the parent country, to the British rule itself, as represented by the Crown, to demonstrate by every outward mark how powerfully, deeply, and demonstrably the European and Christian people of the country are impressed with the conviction that the present representative of the British nation is, as a simple unit, engaged in committing the British rule to a policy fraught with the greatest danger to that rule. In a word, this powerful section of the people would not be true to itself and the real and permanent interests of this country, in fact, place itself, and the cause it advocates in a false position, if it allowed its representatives to follow in the wake of a Juggernaut car, while avowedly denouncing its raison d'être.

It is this kind of sham in public policy that has placed the British rule in this country in the present predicament, in the hands of its present representative here, supported by Mr. Gladstone. If the people of England could but be drawn out of the narrow sphere of their own visible interests as bounded by the range of their physical and mental vision, and if they could be made to understand intelligently the value to their own interests, both materially and politically of this dependency of the Crown, if the representatives of the people of England could be educated up to this mark, and be made thoroughly to understand the dangers to which the well being and security of the dependency and the parent country are now being exposed, we may be very sure that Mr. Gladstone, who doubtless relies on a strong following, would soon find his footing utterly insecure, and drop his representative in this country and his revolutionary policy as he would a hot potato. But here again one is reminded of the hackneyed proverb, "Quem deus" &c.

All the world sees that, with old age upon him, Mr. Gladstone cannot but lose the vigour of mind, as he has lost that of the body, as all his foreign policy is every day demonstrating, and so long as he is retained at the head the country cannot be expected to escape the breakers of one kind or other with which it is the fate of all nations to be more or less always surrounded. It may well be that the present evils with which the well being of this and the parent country are threatened, may be intended by an overruling Providence to result in good. No doubt, that is a consolatory idea for all who look a little beyond the merely human course of things, but at the same time we are taught that, if we trust in Providence, we must at the same time keep our powder dry, and this means, among other things, that we must not put ourselves in a false position by committing ourselves to the hollow half-hearted policy of showing, by outward or lip service, a respect for things, principles, or persons which and whom we avowedly condemn and don't respect. For instance, earnest, honest, truthful people don't go to hear a preacher of the Gospel whose exposition of it they do not approve, simply because he stands in a pulpit as the ostensible representative of a superior. Being whose very name he may be dishonouring, and whose cause he may be ruining.—

KANGRA VALLEY INDIAN TEA GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,

LEICESTER-SQUARE.

The object of the Planters who have formed this Association is to establish a business for the direct supply of Tea from the Plantations of the Kangra Valley to the Public.

The distinctive feature of the business of this Association is, that the Tea is delivered to consumers in the original One-lb. tin foil lined parcels in which it is packed in the Valley, and it is guaranteed to be Absolutely Pure. There are three qualities, retailing respectively at 4s., 3s., and 2s. 6d.

The Association hopes that it may, without presumption, safely recommend this Tea to the Public, believing that it will continue to give the greatest satisfaction.

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EX- PRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 200 millions of our fellow-subjects.

VERBATIM REPORT OF THE PAPER READ BY MR. ROPER LETHBRIDGE ON "THE MISCHIEF THREATENED BY THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL."

TOGETHER WITH THE DISCUSSION THEREON, AT THE MEETING OF THE EAST INDIA
ASSOCIATION, ON OCTOBER 30, 1883.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1883.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

ON Wednesday, the 30th Oct., Mr. Roper Lethbridge, C.I.E., read a paper before the East India Association at St. James's Hall, London, on "The Mischief Threatened by the Bengal Tenancy Bill." The Right Hon. Lord STANLEY of ALDERLEY occupied the chair, and there was a numerous and influential attendance. The following is a verbatim report of the paper:—

When last session I had the honour of addressing some remarks to this Association in defence of a certain class of our fellow-subjects in the East, I claimed your generous interest in the question on the ground that the very raison d'être of our Association is to endeavour to represent to the Government and the people of Britain the grievances, the needs, and the aspirations of all the otherwise unrepresented communities of India. But I am sure that to-day I need offer no excuse at all for bringing before you what I believe to be the threatened trouble and danger of a whole province—a province nearly as large as the German Empire, and as populous as France and England put together. For it is unnecessary for me to point out to you that, since Bengal is largely and indeed almost exclusively an agricultural country, no change of the law there can be more momentous, or more entirely deserving of the close attention and careful study of all friends of India than one that altogether remodels, whether for good or for evil, the relations of landlord to tenant and under-tenant, of tenant and under-tenant to landlord, and of each to the soil. And I pray you to believe that I have undertaken this task, not in the interests of any one particular section of the community, but with a sincere desire for the happiness and prosperity of every class in the Province in which I have spent so many pleasant years of my life.

The Bengal Tenancy Bill is modestly intitled by Mr. Ilbert; "A Bill to Amend and Consolidate certain Enactments relating to the Law of Landlord and Tenant within the Territories under the administration of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal." I find, indeed, in Chapter I., Section 4 (c), a very significant, a most eloquent proviso, that "nothing in this Act shall affect . . . any enactment regulating the procedure for the realisation of rents in estates belonging to the Government, or under the management of the Court of Wards, or of the Revenue Authorities." But except in the case of the population of these happy and supremely virtuous estates, which obviously can need no repentance, it seems to me that Mr. Ilbert's proposals threaten to turn the whole social fabric of the great agricultural community of Bengal upside down, and inside out. If I, or those who follow me in this discussion, can show that this is what is likely to happen if the Bengal Tenancy Bill is forced into law: If we can show that this measure is introduced, not to meet any actual need, or even any demand, but that the quiet of the land is being disturbed to suit the visionary theories of well-meaning but unpractical men, and in defiance of the most solemn pledges of the British Government: If above all, we can show that the proposals of the Bill, so far from benefiting in the slightest degree any considerable section of the agricultural community, must inevitably involve landlords and tenants alike in one common ruin; then I am confident that the members of this Association will gladly unite with us in supporting the nearly unanimous petition of the Native land-owners of Bengal and Behar, and in respectfully praying His Excellency the Viceroy to re-consider the edict that has gone forth in regard to this Bill.

THE LEADING FEATURES OF THE BILL.

Many of my hearers this afternoon will be familiar with the leading features of the proposed legislation; but for the benefit of those who are strangers to the controversy, I will briefly sketch them, without going into any details or technicalities, or touching on any points that do not seem to be specially important.

First of all, in the Bengal millennium to which we are to be introduced by Mr. Ilbert, there will be, of course, any amount of the three F's, in their fullest and most rasping form, so as virtually to cut off the zemindar from all further control over or concern with his own land, except as an annuitant or rent-charger. But mark well: All these exceedingly valuable rights and privileges, taken from the zemindar, apparently in gross violation of the most solemn pledges of the British Government in the Permanent Settlement, are to be conferred—not on the actual cultivator, who may be, and under this Bill probably will be, under tenants, with no rights of any sort whatever, and almost in a state of serfdom, but—on any land-jobbing money lender who chooses to buy up the occupancy rights of a ryot who has acquired them.

Where anything in the nature of either of the three F's has already been peaceably and amicably in vogue, the ingenuity of the draughtsman has been called in, to invent some more drastic form, as if to be in keeping with the general spirit of the Bill, and to avoid all risk of continued peace and friendship.

Take, for instance, the first F.—Fixity of tenure. There is already a very large amount of "fixity of tenure" in Bengal. Good authorities have estimated that nine out of every ten ryots in Bengal proper already possess occupancy rights, whether as customary rights sanctioned by the old regulations, or as rights acquired under Act. 10 of 1859, or otherwise. So the Government of India, as if to keep up its character, has ingeniously devised a new turn of the screw in this direction, by proposing to enact, that a man who has acquired occupancy rights over the tiniest plot of land in an estate, shall, ipso facto, be held to have acquired those rights over all the rest of the land he may hold in that estate, even if the latter has only been held for a single day, and if it be a hundred times the size of the small plot that confers the title.

Again, the occupancy rights are to be acquired by the ryot whether he wishes it or not; they are acquired "notwithstanding any contract to the contrary." The abolition of freedom of contract, which is one of the great points of this Bill, I hold to be as degrading to the ryot as it is annoying to the zemindar, and as likely to be prejudicial to his interests.

And, once more, these occupancy rights, and this fixity of tenure, are henceforward to grow up as inexorably in the landlords' own domain-land, if let for any exceptional reason or temporary exigency to a tenant, as it does in lands that have always been ryoti. And the retrospective character of the proposed legislation is applied with such rigour to the question of what is domain-land (khāmār) and what is not, that no land is to be held on domain unless it has been continuously occupied by the landlord as his private land for twelve years prior to the introduction of the Act. And further, no additions are henceforward to be made to the domain-land for any reason whatever. For instance, a landlord may lose all his domain by diluvion, but is not to be allowed the privilege of adding to it in consequence of alluvion, or by reclamation of waste. And lastly, to secure the rigorous enforcement of this provision, the Local Government may order a survey and register to be made of all khāmār land in any district or districts, thereby, at a huge cost, letting loose on the land all that storm of extortion and oppression from subordinate officials that usually attends all inquisitorial operations of this kind.

I imagine few of my hearers to-day will agree with the gentleman who wrote the other day to his landlord (whose ancestors have held the land during the last three centuries), objecting any longer to pay rent on the ground that it is an "immoral tax on industry;" and, while unable to say that the rent is high or that the harvest has not been plentiful, advising the owner to "take himself off," and not "rob" him of his "hard-earned money."

Next we come to the second F., that has such a plausible sound, under the name of "Fair Rent." We all know the difficulties that have arisen in the ardent search for an adequate definition of Fair Rent instituted in the course of recent Irish land legislation. Some of us may approve, some of us will probably disapprove, of the "live and thrive" theory that has been adopted in Ireland, and that has relegated the teachings of political economy to the distant regions of the planets Jupiter and Saturn. But whatever may be our opinions on this controverted point, we shall all admit that the rulings of "The Bengal Tenancy Bill" are far more arbitrary than those of the Irish Land Acts. They amount broadly to these:—

(1.) "Fair Rents" are to become universal in Bengal.

(2.) The tenure-holder may obtain the "Fair Rent," by first ignoring all existing contracts for enhancement (which are hereby swept away) and enforcing all existing contracts against enhancement (which are to retain all their virtue); then squeezing the landlord down to the lowest rate obtainable by the higgling of the market under these favourable conditions; and finally harassing the unfortunate landlord, either by vexatious abatement suits to which no penalties are attached, or by paying into Court an inadequate rent, or by any other means at his disposal.

(3.) The landlord, on the other hand, may obtain the "Fair Rent," if he can. But, as I have said, all existing contracts empowering him to enhance are swept away, all contracts forbidding enhancement are retained. He can make no new contracts for enhancement, except at the sweet will of the revenue officer, who is to "satisfy himself" that it is fair and equitable, and even then only under the most stringent limitations of both the actual and the relative amount of enhancement permissible. He is further to be limited, in such districts as the Local Government may choose, by the arbitrary maxima of a "Table of Rates" to be drawn up by the revenue officer at the expense of a local rate. And if he shall have succeeded in getting through the meshes of all these various limitations, he may institute a costly suit for enhancement of rent in the Civil Court; but here again only under the most stringent conditions. And after all this, he is at last met by the absurdly low and arbitrary limit, that under no circumstances can he obtain more than one-fifth of the estimated annual value of the produce of the land in staple crops, at harvest-time prices.

I believe this to be an accurate statement of the way in which the second F. is settled by "The Bengal Tenancy Bill;" of which the points seem to me to be, that it virtually sets up the arbitrary opinion of the revenue officer as the criterion of what is to be the amount of the landlord's income, that it absolutely necessitates an enormous amount of litigation, that it summarily sweeps away all contracts or other presumptions in favour of the landlord, and rigorously enforces all that may be in favour of the tenant.

Next, we come to the third F. (Free Sale). The sudden and wholesale introduction of the transferability of occupancy-rights seems to me by far the most mischievous and revolutionary part of the Bill. Such transferability as a principle has been hitherto absolutely unknown in Bengal; even as an incident it has been unknown, except under some few exceptional or local customs in Eastern Bengal. The disastrous effect that this revolution will have on the position, the influence, and even the personal comfort of the landlord, by taking from him all control over the selection of his own tenants, and putting him at the mercy of his bitterest or most disreputable enemy in this respect—has apparently been perceived even by the Government of India. Mr. Ilbert, in his Statement of Objects and Reasons, speaks of these possibilities with a sympathetic tenderness, that reminds one of the bitter tears shed by the Carpenter, when he contemplated the sad fate of the oysters he was about to devour. Mr. Ilbert feelingly mentions "cases in which a spiteful neighbour might be willing to pay an exorbitant sum for the occupancy right with a view to harassing the landlord." But what is the remedy provided by the Government of India for the unfortunate landlord against the very worst that can happen to him? Simply this, that they profess to give him the right of pre-emption on the occasion of the sale of the occupancy-rights on any of his farms. And what is it that they allow him to buy? Amazing to say, it is NOT the transferable occupancy-right—which they allow anyone else to buy, and for which they force the landlord to pay the full value to the uttermost farthing (to say nothing of the obvious probabilities of tricks being practised to raise the pre-emption price). What the landlord buys at this full price is simply the right, on his own land, to refuse the new obnoxious tenant pro hac vice only, and to cultivate the land in person; for he is not allowed to sell the commodity he is supposed to have bought, and if he lets the land to any other tenant, the new tenant ipso facto acquires that commodity, can sell it once more to the old obnoxious purchaser, and so the process of bleeding can go on ad infinitum, or until the landlord is ruined. And each time the landlord buys, he buys not any valuable or exchangeable commodity, but simply a temporary immunity from the persecution to which the law has made him liable.

So much for the three F's, the total abolition of freedom of contract, and the retrospective effect to be given to the Bill. I need only mention two other points. One of these concerns the proposed abolition of summary distraint, and the substitution for it of the tedious and costly processes of the Civil Courts. Herein the new procedure will render the realisation of rent by distraint at once more troublesome to the landlord and more ruinous to the tenant; and will not infrequently defeat the ends of justice altogether, by reason of the delay it involves. And the fact that this Bill had its origin in a pledge, on the part of the Government, that the zemindars should receive greater facilities for the prompt realisation of their rents, in consideration of their unremunerated services in collecting the Road Cess and Public Works Cess, seems to render it the more to be regretted that no attempt has been made to simplify or cheapen the course of the law in this respect.

Lastly the tenant-at-will, who is dignified by Mr. Ilbert with the title of "the ordinary ryot," is now no longer to be allowed to be a tenant-at-will, even if he wishes it. The position of tenant-at-will, often so convenient to a tenant, is to be abolished altogether. So far from his holding being determinable on the termination of his lease at the landlord's option, he cannot be ejected even for any misconduct, other than non-payment of rent, or certain breaches of the provisions of the Act! And again, as usual, we get the everlasting "notwithstanding any contract to the contrary." And there is worse yet. Suppose it has suited the convenience of a landlord—who has perhaps planted fruit-trees in his land, and does not wish the land to lie idle while they are growing up—to take a temporary tenant for a short time at an abnormally low rent.

It has also suited the convenience of a tenant to take this temporary holding at this low rent for this short time. Well, at the expiry of the term agreed upon, it seems to me that both equity and common-sense would say that there is an end of the transaction. The tenant has certainly had all he has paid for, and all he expected. Not so, says Mr. Ilbert. If the tenant has paid his rent regularly, and has not transgressed certain provisions of the Act, the landlord cannot recover possession of his land; he can only bring a suit for enhancement of rent within the very stringent limits mentioned before, and even if he succeeds in this suit, and obtains a decree of ejectment, he then has to pay to the tenant, not only the full compensation for all improvements, but "compensation for disturbance" to the tune of ten times the enhancement of rent demanded!

THE RESULTS OF THE BILL—(1), TO THE LANDLORD.

Such, in brief, are the main changes introduced by this Bill; and it seems to me that a mere recital of them is sufficient to show how sweeping, and, indeed, revolutionary is their character. The landholders of Bengal and Behar, in their petitions to Parliament, come forward solemnly to declare that the Bill will "revolutionise the present relations between landlord and tenant in the provinces of Bengal and Behar"—will "redistribute landed property on a new and inequitable basis"—will "fetter the freedom of action of all classes interested in agriculture, by driving them at almost every step of their mutual transactions to Courts of Law and fiscal officers"—will "foster disputes, litigation, and animosity in lieu of peace, harmony, and goodwill"—and is "a policy which, while confiscating the property of your petitioners, will prove most detrimental to the true interests and prosperity of the country."

And it will be seen that these most alarming statements are by no means mere unsupported assertions; they are, in each of the petitions, proved to demonstration by a thorough and rigorous examination of those provisions of the Bill which I have briefly referred to. It will be acknowledged by everyone that all, and more than all, the most rasping conditions of recent Irish legislation—fixity of tenure, fair rent, free sale, compensation for disturbance, abolition of power of contract, and, in fact, the solid programme of the most "advanced" school—are to be introduced at a rush into Bengal, a country that differs as widely from Ireland, in every political and economical aspect, as it is possible for any two countries to differ; whilst, astonishing to relate, all these enormously valuable rights—filched from the zemindars in defiance of the most solemn pledges of the British Government in the Permanent Settlement, and reducing them (see Behar Petition, Clause 7) to the position of "mere cyphers upon their estates"—are to be conferred upon, not the actual cultivators, but what will practically be a newly-created class of middlemen, against whom the actual cultivators will possess no rights whatever, not even those rights which they now possess against the zemindars! For such an astounding triumph of what the Behar zemindars justly called (Clause 67) "visionary theories" over common-sense, equity, and good faith, it would be difficult to find a parallel in either British or Indian history. And, as if to accentuate the monstrous injustice of these proposals, I have shown it is to be deliberately enacted that they are not to affect "the procedure for the realisation of rents in estates belonging to the Government!"—these are the very words of the Bill, Chapter I, Section 4 (c)!

Under the Bill, absolutely the whole of the effective control over the land—and consequently, of course, all the influence and prestige in the country that are attached to that control—will pass from the present lords of the soil to the new class of middlemen, consisting chiefly of money-lenders. Looking to the political effect of such a substitution, I think we must entirely agree with the Behar zemindars, when they declare—

"Your Petitioners would further respectfully say that they have done nothing to deserve such treatment at the hands of the British Government. They have always been conspicuously loyal to the British Crown, during the times of difficulty at the beginning of the century; and during the more troublous days of 1857, the zemindars of Bengal and Behar placed themselves, their influence, and their wealth ungrudgingly at the disposal of the Government. But if this wealth, and this influence is destroyed, to what class of the community will the Government in future look for support? If the zemindars, whose welfare has always been bound up with the British Government, are sacrificed to visionary theories, what class of the community will be able in future to repose with confidence on—what had up to the present time been inviolable—the honour and good faith of the British Government?"

I would earnestly implore Lord Ripon and his advisers solemnly to ponder these striking words, so eloquent in their simple truthfulness. To those who know anything of the history of British rule in India I need hardly say that the landholders of Bengal and Behar form a large and most important community, with a few rich men, and thousands of very poor men, unsurpassed in loyalty and devotion to the just and benevolent government that has hitherto protected them, and every other community in the land, with scrupulous impartiality. Well may these men ask what they have done, that they should be thus treated by the British Government. It is well known that the stringent provisions of the Permanent Settlement, and the exorbitant assessment made under it, ruined the greater part of the old aristocracy within comparatively a few years of its enactment; and now Mr. Ilbert's proposals, if carried into law, will ruthlessly sweep away, not only the few families that survived those early days of disaster, but also the thousands whose chiefs have from time to time purchased or enlarged their domains, actually on the faith of the pledges of the Government of India. For what will, if we look into the matter closely, be the exact position of the titular landholder under the proposed legislation? In the first place he will be liable to Government, under all the rigorous penalties of the inexorable Sunset law, for the prompt payment, to the very minute, of the uttermost farthing of the revenue demand; and he will also be liable for the prompt payment also of the road-cess and other State burdens. Next, he will still be expected, though with an ever-decreasing income to meet it, most, if not all, of those old claims on his liberality and his public purse, that were cheerfully acknowledged in the past time of prosperity. He will, it is true, be entitled under the law to receive a certain income from his virtual successors in the possession of the land, if he can get it. But what are the probabilities on this point? Everything is against the nominal landlord. A maximum income, far below what he gets now, far below what he conceives to be his due, and certainly far below what he could get if a "Free Market" had been one of the Government F.'s, is fixed for him by the law. Beyond this he is not allowed to receive anything; but there is no minimum of abatement on the other side. In my sketch of the law, I have only alluded to a few of the methods by which tenants will in future be able to harass their landlords and lower their rents, either singly or (still more irresistibly) in combination. Litigation under the proposed Act will be for the tenant little more than a game of "Heads I win, tails you lose"; for every presumption is on his side, all onus of proof is laid on the landlord. If he wins, he mulcts the landlord heavily; if he loses, he is in many cases no worse off than before, for no penalties are attached to his vexatious proceedings, and he cannot be ejected or otherwise punished. What is likely to be the condition of the landlord—how often is he likely to get even the miserable maximum allowed by the Bill—when he is liable to be continually forced to pay blackmail under the so-called pre-emption clause, to pay compensation for disturbance, to pay exorbitant penalties when he attempts to get what he believes to be his dues, to recover nothing from unsuccessful abatement suits, and to suffer heavy permanent loss whenever luck or the whim of the Court gives an abatement suit against him? What is likely to be the fate of any landlord (unless he has enormous wealth) who happens to have on his land a set of wily land-grabbers whom he cannot possibly shake off, who stick to him like leeches, and avail themselves of every turn of fortune and every vagary of the law to suck him dry? The tenant can run away from the landlord; the landlord cannot run away from the occupancy-tenant. The tenant is allowed to squeeze as much as he can out of the landlord; the landlord is not allowed to squeeze anything (beyond limits that are absurdly inadequate) out of the tenant. Under these circumstances it is clear that in the long run the land-grabbers must win; the landlord will always be fighting a losing battle, and the rent (as far as he, the landlord, is concerned) will always be a diminishing quantity.

But if this is likely to be the unhappy position of the landlord in regard to his income, it will certainly be much worse in regard to every other consideration that has hitherto made the possession of land valuable. I would like to ask this plain and simple question of any supporter of the Bill: What other rights, beyond those of a mere annuitant, will be left to the nominal landlord over his land? Will he be able to choose his own tenants? Will he be able to extend his domain-land? Will he be able to diminish the extent of his domain-land, except at a serious pecuniary risk? Will he be able to attach his own conditions, in any way whatever, to the cultivation of the soil? All these privileges, and every other right of property in the land worthy of consideration—save only its public burdens, and the claim to receive a dwindling annuity from its practical owners—will have been transferred to the money-lenders from the nominal landlords.

And once more, who are these nominal landlords, the zemindars? I have said that they consist of a few rich men, and thousands of very poor men; and in support of this, I would refer you to some very striking statistics that have, lately been compiled and published in the Hindoo Patriot, under the title of "The Financial Status of the Zemindars." Many undoubtedly benevolent people in England fancy that, in attacking the zemindars, the Government is only forcing a gang of wealthy oppressors to disgorge a portion of their ill-gotten gains. I imagine these worthy folk will be somewhat taken aback when they learn that, out of a total of 206,000 zemindars in Bengal, no less than 197,000 enjoy the magnificent average rental of something less than Rs. 7 a month, or say £8 a year; and of the rest, 8,638 (who may be called middle-class zemindars) own an average rental of Rs. 229 a month, or say £320 per annum. This leaves us the wonderful number of 441 persons who alone can be wealthy zemindars!—out of a total of 206,000 zemindars whose rights and pockets are attacked by this Bill. And let me point out to you that it will be exactly these small zemindars who will suffer first and most severely from this Bill. For large numbers of them will probably be at once ruined by the sudden contraction of their credit, that will follow the passing of the Bill, and the consequent depreciation of the value of zemindari property; and, indeed, when the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal visited Behar a few months ago, the associated landholders of that province laid the most alarming facts before him as to the effect already produced by the mere introduction of the Bill. "The selling price," they assured Mr. Thompson, "of small zemindars has, since the agitation for changes in the rent-law has commenced, fallen from thirty-two years' to sixteen years' purchase, and there is a tendency to further decrease." And they also declared that, where sales had been in course of negotiation when the agitation commenced, the buyers had held off, in anticipation of the great depreciation in the value of land to be expected.

THE RESULTS OF THE BILL—(2) TO THE TENANT.

"But," it may perhaps be said, "if all these good things, all this influence, all this power, all this hard cash, be taken from the wealthy zemindars"—passing rich on £8 a year!—"to be distributed among the needy ryots, surely that in itself will be a great achievement." Well, if the fact were so, it might possibly be regarded as a very good thing by many excellent people in this modern age of "practical politics," when that which is apparently expedient for the moment is so often allowed to over-ride alike the dictates of morality and the teachings of political economy.

It may be admitted that the immediate and ostensible benefits are sufficiently specious to give colour to those incentives to discontent and disturbance, which are being flaunted before the wondering eyes of the hitherto fairly contented and prosperous Bengal ryot by the supporters of Lord Ripon's policy. The ryots are not only promised, by the Bill, a sudden and outrageous extension of those occupancy-rights which they have been hitherto peacefully and quietly acquiring under the operation of Act 10 of 1859; but they are also to be endowed with the power of free-sale of these occupancy-rights—a power that is absolutely foreign to all the customs and traditions of the country. A great deal has been made of some exceptional or local customs of free-sale, said to be especially prevalent in the district of Backergunge; but how far they have been really prevalent may be estimated from the following words of Babu Nuffer Chandra Bhatta, the first Subordinate Judge of the Twenty-four Pergunnas:—

"Of the alleged custom I have not been able to see one instance in which it was proved in my experience of nearly eighteen years in the districts of Nuddia, 24-Purgunnahs, Moorshedabad, Backergunge, and Dacca. Ryots sometimes sell such rights; but landlords do not recognise such transfer, by receiving rents from the purchasers, unless they pay them salami or submit to an enhancement of rent." The fact is, the gift of this power of transfer really is, and will strike the imagination of every discontented ryot as being a douceur in ready cash, arbitrarily extracted by the Government from the pockets of the zemindars and presented to the ryots. For, with numerous money-lenders in every district eagerly thirsting for investments in land, and large numbers of indigo-planters reasonably anxious to acquire extended facilities for sowing indigo, it is perfectly certain that the market for this class of investment, to be created under the Bill, will be a most lively one—and that these transferable occupancy-rights (which are henceforth to confer an infinitely more effective control over the land than that which will be vested in the nominal landholders) will be sold to the new middlemen, until there are no cultivating occupancy-ryots left with a bigha to sell. I confidently ask you, is not such a measure certain, in the long run, so far from improving the condition of the cultivating ryots, to degrade them to the condition of day-labourers hardly better off than serfs?

The amazing thing is, that Lord Ripon's Government seems to be perfectly aware of the mischief it is doing—and to be placidly content to bequeath to its successors the duty, not only of repairing the frightful damage, but even of ascertaining whether there be any possible means of repairing it. Mr. Ilbert, in Section 41 of the Statement of Objects and Reasons annexed to the Bill, blandly remarks:—

"That the powers of transferring which the Bill recognises may in time lead to a state of things in which the great bulk of the actual cultivators would be not occupancy-ryots, but under-ryots with little protection from the law, is indeed within the range of possibility; but if such a state of things should ever arise we may rest assured that the Government of the day will know how to deal with it." It will be readily believed that Lord Ripon's Law Member would hardly make such a damning confession as this, if the probabilities of the case were not so patent as to be beyond the range of honest or even decent controversy. When Mr. Ilbert admits that it is "within the range of possibility" that the great bulk of the actual cultivators will, under this beautiful Bill, lose their status as occupancy-ryots, and become "under-ryots with little protection from the law," few will find it hard to believe the positive assertion of nearly every impartial bystander, who is familiar with the circumstances of the country, that the great bulk of the actual cultivators are absolutely certain to become mere coolies, with no protection whatever (in regard to rights they will no longer possess) from the law. The only hard thing to believe, in the whole matter, is, that any Government could thus—with their eyes open—with no pressure or demand from any person or class, and in cynical disregard of the protests of the class immediately affected—persist in forcing on the ryots a boon that must be fatal to them, whilst it is filched from the zemindars, whom it will leave poor indeed. And be it remembered that Lord Ripon is insisting on this most important and most pernicious Transferability Clause in direct defiance of the recommendations of the Behar Rent Commission of 1878—and in opposition to the experience of the North Western Provinces, where occupancy-ryots are not permitted to transfer their holdings.

And I would remark, par parenthèse, that when I speak of the occupancy-ryot having the right of "free sale" under the Bill, I can only do so with a qualification. He can sell his occupancy-right to anyone he likes (to his landlord's greatest enemy, for instance) except—to the landlord himself! It is true that the landlord is mocked, as we have seen, with a proviso that purports to give him the privilege of pre-emption, "at a price to be fixed by the Civil Court." But when we examined what it is he is allowed to buy, we found it to be a commodity altogether different from that which any other purchaser would acquire. We found it to be, in point of fact, a commodity absolutely valueless, except in the very unusual case where the landholder might be able to undertake the personal cultivation of the land. On the other hand, if a money-lender or anyone else buys it, not only can he sell it, or deal with it precisely as he likes, but further—the tenants who now take the land, and cultivate it under the money-lender, have no rights whatever against him, not even Mr. Ilbert's "little protection from the law!"

The tradition that a curse is attached to the enjoyment, even under the sanction of the law, of that which rightfully belongs to others, is doubtless a superstition outside the sphere of our modern "practical politics." But it seems to me very evident that, under the simple operation of ordinary economic laws, the property that Lord Ripon proposes to take away from the landlords of Bengal will benefit no one, except perhaps the money-lender and the tax-gatherer. Doubtless, while the plunder is being consumed, there will be a brief and illusory appearance of prosperity in the country. On the proceeds of the loot, the ryots will have a short spell of "ryotous" good living—that is to say, marriages, fireworks, feasts, and tamlashas of all sorts will be the order of the day. But when all the fireworks have been burnt, and all the feasts consumed, what is the state of affairs with which the Government will be brought face to face? Who will then occupy the places of the trustworthy, responsible revenue-payers who now own the land, and of the fairly contented and prosperous peasantry? We shall have a deeply impoverished class of rent-chargers, nominally land-owners, but really retaining few of the privileges of the position, except that of being sold up under the Sunset law for default of revenue. We shall have all the effective control of the land, such as the right of transfer, &c., vested in a new class, consisting of money-lenders and other novi homines, utterly devoid of sympathy for the actual cultivators, and bound by no responsibilities towards either the State or the ryots—a class that will naturally consider its whole duty to begin and end in the payment of the zemindars' annuities, and that will enjoy the fullest liberty to grind down the unfortunate cultivators. And what will be the conditions of these latter? I think we should implore Lord Ripon and the Government to consider this carefully before it is too late. The actual cultivators will not only be without rights of any kind, or "protection from the law;" they will be without means, without the credit they have hitherto been able to fall back upon, living from hand to mouth in time of prosperity, and in time of famine entirely at the mercy of speculating employers, who will have none of that permanent interest in their ultimate welfare which has hitherto been a bond of union between landlord and tenant. Is this a state of affairs that can be contemplated with satisfaction? It is true that the Government will have succeeded in freeing a large share of the landed property of Bengal from the trammels of the Permanent Settlement, so tantalising to those financiers who look upon confiscation as a fair source of revenue. It is true that the Government will be able to impose heavy taxation on the middlemen who will have become the real owners of the land of Bengal, with perhaps less inconvenience than would be caused by a downright open and "honest" violation of the Settlement. But will any statesman maintain that this trivial, not to say underhand, fiscal advantage will atone, either to the country or to the Government, for an impoverished and displaced land-proprietary, for a demoralised and pauperised peasantry, and the soil in the hands of land-jobbers?

Mischief and suffering, hardly less grave, will also be inflicted on the ryots by the abolition of freedom of contract in agricultural transactions. "Notwithstanding any contract to the contrary" is a phrase so characteristic of the lawlessness and bad faith of the whole of the proposed legislation, that it might serve as a motto for the supporters of the Bill. It is declared by Mr. Ilbert, in his Statement of Objects and Reasons, to be "essential;" and I have no doubt that Mr. Ilbert is very confident that, in insisting on this principle, he is doing the ryots a service. He condescends to give the reasons for his belief, by quoting from a letter of the Government of India, which doubtless conveys his own views at a somewhat earlier period. He says:—

"Such is the power of the zemindars, so numerous and effective are the means possessed by most of them for inducing the ryots to accept agreements which, if history, custom, and expediency be regarded, are wrongful and contrary to good policy, that to uphold contracts in contravention of the main purpose of the Bill would be, in our belief, to condemn it to defeat and failure. It is absolutely necessary that such contracts should be disallowed, and in this conclusion we have the support not only of the Bengal Government, but also of the almost unanimous opinions of the Bengal officers."

The "almost unanimous opinions of the Bengal officers" is somewhat vague. Most of the "opinions of Bengal officers" to which I have had access have happened to be exactly opposed to these "almost unanimous opinions;" and though it is, of course, quite possible that they may be exceptions that prove the rule, still it is also possible that Mr. Ilbert may have generalised too hastily from a limited number of opinions before him. We know, at any rate, from the Times telegram of Monday last, that the majority of the opinions of the district officials, lately sent in to Government, are "unfavourable" to the Bill generally; and I doubt very much whether the practical and experienced officers of Bengal would support such a measure as the wholesale sweeping away of contracts, past, present, and future, as proposed by Mr. Ilbert. It is true that the ryots will be the chief gainers by his application of his sponge so freely to past and existing contracts—simply because he takes care to enact at the same time that all contracts in favour of the ryot shall still be strictly enforced, notwithstanding any legislation to the contrary. But who, I ask, will be the real sufferers by the abolition of contracts in the future? Will it be the zemindars, who, according to Mr. Ilbert, already possess all the advantages enumerated above, which hardly need to be increased under contracts, and which ought to enable them to get on very comfortably without contracts? Will it not rather, and most obviously, be the ryot who will suffer by a provision that deprives him of the right of an intelligent human being to avail himself of the protection of the law, in settling the terms of his agreement with the landlord? To the landlord, the loss of the right to contract—though insulting and often vexatious—can seldom be a matter of the first importance. For instance, even in regard to the acquisition of occupancy, rights by a settled ryot holding ryoti land—the case over which Mr. Ilbert shouts his war-cry of "Notwithstanding any contract to the contrary," with great gusto—a zemindar who is evilly disposed, or who thinks himself justified in treating his ryots with the same bad faith that is shown to himself by the Government, would be able, if sufficiently unscrupulous, to "walk round" the Act. But the ryot it will often be a matter of great convenience, nay of the highest importance, to be able to secure some considerable personal benefit in return for the relinquishment of his rights under this clause of the Act; and this, if the Bill passes, he will be absolutely unable to do. Often it will happen that the ryot, under this grandmotherly legislation, being unable to enter into a legal and binding contract, to obtain an advantage of great importance to him, will have to give vastly more in someone of those numerous illegal or circuitous ways which are always devised to meet the necessities of such cases. Every economist knows that usury laws mean ruinous interest for those who can least afford it, illegal understandings, and demoralisation. High customs duties mean not only high prices, but also extensive smuggling; and so in everything. And the abolition of freedom of contract in agricultural negotiations in Bengal will most infallibly produce a vast deal of utterly gratuitous suffering on the part of those whom the Government professes to wish to benefit, together with much underhand and illegal bargaining and wide-spread demoralisation. As the Maharajah of Darbhanga well put it, in the debate in the Viceroy's Legislative Council last March, "Parties understand their own interests better, and it is idle for the Legislature to effect to protect their interests." It is, at any rate, worse than idle for the Legislature to attempt to do so, on the strength of such a limited comprehension of the real nature of those interests, as that displayed by the authors of this Bill.

THE RESULTS OF THE BILL—(3) TO OTHERS.

Indeed, to say the truth, I can find no set-off whatever to the mischief that will be wrought by the Bill, alike to landlords and to tenants. I think what I have already said is sufficient to dispel the notion that the State revenue will derive any durable benefit from the violation of the Permanent Settlement; though we must all be aware that the suspicion, that some such vague hopes really underlie the action of the Government, is widely prevalent among the people of Bengal. It is not surprising that such a suspicion is entertained; for, as a matter of fact, the Bill really does take away from the zemindars a considerable proportion of the landed property of Bengal, which proportion is, ipso facto, freed from the slight restriction on taxation that is still believed to be imposed by the Permanent Settlement. But this inconsiderable gain (if it be considered a gain) in taxing power, will not make up to the Government what it must surely lose in the general disquietude and depression produced by this Bill, in the stoppage of all improvements, in the cultivation of the land, and in the substitution of a much less trustworthy class of taxpayers in place of the prosperous and responsible men who now pay land-revenue.

It has been said that the indigo-planters will be benefited by this Bill. It may be that they will obtain some temporary advantage, by acquiring the rights of occupancy-ryots, and being thereby able to bring more land under indigo-cultivation; and also by the fact that the transferability of the ryot's lots will afford additional security against the ryot in all dealings between indigo-planters and ryots. But against these benefits must be set the consideration that they obviously will tend largely to increase the unpopularity of indigo-planting among all classes of the native population, and may not improbably result in placing many indigo-planters in an unpleasant position of antagonism with their neighbours of all classes. Moreover, the indigo-planters, whether they happen to be zemindars themselves, or whether they happen to be ryots, will infallibly suffer with all the rest of the community. And so, too, will the lawyers and the money-lenders, the classes that will benefit most immediately under the Bill. The impoverishment of the zemindars, and the degradation of the ryots, will really be, alike for money-lenders and for lawyers, the killing of the goose that lays the golden eggs.

THE ORIGIN OF THE BILL.

If I have at all succeeded in exposing the dangerous nature of the proposed legislation, the question will at once occur to every one—What was the origin of the Bill? What excuses are offered by the Government of India for its revolutionary provisions? What demand was there for it? Is it right for the Government thus to redistribute the landed property of Bengal? To these questions I now address myself, by the light of Mr. Ilbert's Statement of Objects and Reasons—a document which I would venture to commend to the study of all those who desire to comprehend the somewhat startling course of current legislation in India.

First, as to the origin of the Bill. Mr. Ilbert, in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6, of his "statements," refers it to a general feeling of dissatisfaction with the existing law of landlord and tenant in Bengal, and especially with the working of the famous Act X. of 1859, and its corollary, Act VIII. of 1869. This has doubtless been its origin, as far as Mr. Ilbert has been concerned with it. But, as a fact, it is well-known—and, I believe, is not disputed—that the ball was first set rolling in consequence of the pledges of the Government, that the landowners of Bengal should receive some compensatory advantages for the hardships inflicted on them by the Road Cess legislation in the time of Sir George Campbell. The zemindars themselves, and many others, considered that those hardships amounted to a direct violation of the Permanent Settlement; and I believe that Sir George Campbell himself, and those who thought with him, acknowledged that the landowners might fairly claim some advantage from Government in return for the responsibility for the Road Cess and similar burdens, that was imposed on them. It was, I believe, then understood that the Government would introduce a measure to redress the landlords' grievances in regard to the difficulty of promptly realising their rents under Act X. of 1859, and Act VIII. of 1869, as some set-off to the admitted hardships of the Road Cess and other legislation of that period. One thing and another came in the way, to prevent Sir George Campbell and Sir Richard Temple successively from putting this benevolent intention into effect. As the necessary inquiries went on, their scope appears to have gradually been extended. In the meantime a school of reformers had come into power in India, whose eyes appear to have been dazzled by the splendid achievements of slap-dash land-reform in Ireland. And thus it has come about, that what was to have been a tiny measure of redress has grown into a magnificent measure of confiscation.

THE ARGUMENTS IN FAVOUR OF THE BILL—(1) THE RIGHTS OF GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Ilbert defends his proposals from the imputation that they constitute a breach of the Permanent Settlement, on the ground of the right that must be inherent in every Government to legislate for the "protection and welfare" of all classes of its subjects, and also on the ground that this inherent right was specially reserved by one of the articles of the Settlement. On this, all I have to say is, that Mr. Ilbert is here defending a position that has never been assailed. I should never dream of denying the inherent right which Mr. Ilbert claims for the Government; I should not have dreamt of denying it even if it had never been alluded to in the articles of the Settlement. But what I venture to contend is this:—

You have, rightly or wrongly, wisely or unwisely, made the most solemn pledges to the zemindars of Bengal in the Permanent Settlement,—pledges ratified in language as rigorously exact as that of any covenant in history, and obviously intended to be regarded as specially binding on the British Government and on the honour of the British nation. On the faith of these pledges men have bought and sold land in Bengal for nearly a century—have bequeathed it, have endowed religions and charitable institutions with it, have burdened it, and otherwise dealt with it in every conceivable way. Under these pledges the bulk of the land of Bengal has changed hands—a large proportion has changed hands times out of number. You yourselves, the Government, imposed the conditions of these pledges on the zemindars by an act of despotic power, on the penalty of their losing their position in the country. At first the conditions of the settlements were undeniably hard on the zemindars, and favourable to you; you reaped great and permanent benefit, while the zemindars of that period were almost universally ruined by it. The country has, however, prospered under the system, and now the balance of advantage has turned to the side of the zemindars. Whilst therefore fully admitting the right you claim, as a Government, to legislate "for the protection and welfare" of other classes of your subjects, I say that equity and statesmanship alike demand that you should conclusively show (1) first of all, that the interference with the Permanent Settlement, which you propose, is absolutely necessary for the "protection and welfare" of other classes; and (2) that it in no way interferes unnecessarily with the due fulfilment of a covenant, the advantages of which you have already received, and any unsettlement of which must be entirely in your favour. To these two conditions, the opinions of many would attach a third—that any avoidance of such a covenant on the part of Government ought to be accompanied by provision for the fullest compensation; but whilst personally I entirely agree with this view, it is unnecessary for me to encumber my argument with any further reference to this point.

THE ARGUMENTS IN FAVOUR OF THE BILL—(2) THE MISERIES OF THE RYOT.

But is it a fact that the proposed changes are absolutely necessary for the "protection and welfare" of the ryots of Bengal? I venture to think I have already shown grave reason to doubt whether the changes will in any way conduce to this "protection and welfare." But even if the effect of the changes were likely to be as good, as I believe it is likely to be bad—still, I ask, are any such changes called for? Are they demanded by the ryots, or by those who are really qualified to speak on behalf of the ryots?

In answering this question, it is only fair to Mr. Ilbert and the Government of India that I should acknowledge frankly, that they have put forward no such absurd and preposterous appeals ad misericordiam on behalf of the Bengali ryot, as we have seen and heard put forward by well-meaning but ill-informed persons in England. We have some of us probably read a recent article in an English magazine, written by a lady of whom I would not say one word, save in terms of the deepest and most sincere respect. In that article the astounded Indian and Anglo-Indian reader is taught that "From exceeding centralisation, ryots have been toiling in Madras and starving in the Deccan, in order that gentlemen in Bengal may enjoy incomes of hundreds of thousands a year free from taxes," and much more to the same effect. I do not for a moment doubt that this unspeakable nonsense is implicitly believed by the venerated writer of the article; and yet everyone, who knows anything at all of the real facts of the case, will see at a glance that the statements are not only untrue—their untruthfulness is simply amazing. Just analyse the one sentence I have quoted. "Incomes of hundreds of thousands a year." These may be counted on the fingers of one hand—the income-tax returns show that only forty-three gentlemen in all Bengal enjoy an income of even £6,000 a year and upward from land! "Free from taxes." This is perhaps a riddle—unless, indeed, it means that land-revenue payments are not taxes, in which case it is difficult to see how land is to pay taxes at all! Ryots "starving in the Deccan," to save the pockets of gentlemen in Bengal: here again, even if we admit that ryots are starving in the Deccan, it is difficult to see how that affects the gentlemen in Bengal. If it be a fact that ryots are starving in the Deccan, and if the fact has any connection with the fiscal system at all, surely it does not tell against the fiscal system of Bengal, which you propose indirectly to interfere with, but rather against that of the Deccan (Bombay), to which you seem to wish to assimilate the Bengal system. Then again, in other parts of the article, we are asked to commiserate the poor weakly ryots of Behar as compared with their sturdier brethren of the Gangetic Delta—this "sturdiness" being called into account for all those benefits which those who are acquainted with the facts attribute to the extraordinary development of the jute industry in Eastern Bengal, and to other similar circumstances. And again, the astonishing position is taken up that the average Bengal ryot is worse off than the average Madras or Bombay ryot notwithstanding the "toiling" and the "starving" of the latter.

Now, of course, we all know that this is pure and unmitigated nonsense, though certainly written with the best intentions. I am bound to say that the Government of India does not commit itself to anything of this sort. Only in one single sentence does Mr. Ilbert, in his Statement, advance anything that even approaches to the ad misericordiam argument; and that is when he says—

"In Behar, where the social and economical conditions of the country tend to give the landlords the upper hand, we hear of tenants rack-rented, subjected to quasi-feudal oppressions and arbitrarily ousted from their holdings; in Eastern Bengal, on the contrary, where circumstances favour the tenants, we hear of landlords who not only cannot obtain the enhancement of rent to which they are entitled, but at times, when tenants combine against them, cannot even recover what is admitted to be due at existing rates."

But what are the facts about Behar? Mr. Ilbert is evidently writing from the reports of a good many years ago—when it happened that a large proportion of the land of Behar, owing to the minority of several large zemindars and to other causes, was under the direct management of the Government, and when it is admitted that a somewhat hide-bound system of management may have worked injuriously to the ryots. But what are the facts now? Let us appeal to Sir Ashley Eden, the late Lieutenant Governor—confessedly one of the very highest authorities on the question, and one whom no one will accuse of being partial to the zemindars. In 1881, in addressing a deputation of the Behar landholders, Sir Ashley Eden thus spoke of the condition of the rural population in that portion of his satrapy:—

"I can assure you that nothing has given me greater pleasure than to notice, as I have had ample opportunities of doing, the extraordinary improvement in the condition of the people. It is made manifest in a hundred ways daily, even to the most casual observer. I hear the same story from all classes, official and non-official, and it is a matter for general congratulation.

"This improvement is due to various causes: first and foremost, to several succeeding harvests, plentiful almost beyond the recollection of the present generation, and these full harvests followed years of trial and famine; next, there has been, with growing prosperity, an increase in the value of land, a general awakening of the cultivating classes, and an improved knowledge of their legal rights and privileges, and this has, I hope, been accompanied by a strict administration of the law. Then there has been a greater readiness on the part of landlords to recognise and affirm the rights of cultivators, and I hope that this may to some extent be due to the influence of your Association."

The Maharajah of Darbhanga, a distinguished member of the Viceroy's Council, and himself one of the largest and most liberal landowners in Behar, fully confirms Sir Ashley Eden's opinion. In the debate on the Bill last March, the Maharajah said:—

"I might safely say that, as far as Behar is concerned, no change in the present law is needed; neither the ryots nor the zemindars have asked for a change, and that in itself is sufficient proof that no change is needed. The zemindars certainly do not wish to get any further facilities for the collection of their rents, and the tenants also do not complain of any oppression by the zemindars. A great deal has been said about the oppression of zemindars in Behar, and I doubt not that in Behar there are a few bad zemindars as well as a few bad ryots. But it is most unjust to think that all the Behar zemindars, as a class, are oppressive. That there was a great deal of oppression in former days I do not deny, but Mr. Reynolds, after his last tour, was able to say that things have quite changed of late."

And in the same debate, the Raja Shiva Prasad spoke even more strongly of the comparatively easy condition of the Behar ryot:—

"My Lord, for seven years I have had to look after the affairs of Bettiah, which is one of the largest zemindaris in Behar, and I am in a position to assure your Excellency that I have not found a stronger set of ryots, happier or better off, in any part of the country, from Cashmere and Rajputana down to Puna and Haidarabad."

Now, if this, according to the highest possible authority, is the condition of the ryot in Behar—admitted to be that part of the province in which the population presses most heavily on the land, and where too, there had been, not long before the time of Sir Ashley Eden's tour, an unprecedented series of unfavourable seasons and scanty harvests—what becomes of the necessity of legislating for the "protection and welfare" of the ryot? Here, in the very districts that have suffered most from the too rapid increase of the population and from the inclemency of nature, we find the ryot not only fairly happy and contented, but also in a state of progressive prosperity that promises everything for the future, if only he be let alone.

After this, it is almost unnecessary for me to speak of the condition of the Bengal peasantry in the other parts of the province, where even Mr. Ilbert confesses that "circumstances favour the tenants." This is what Sir Ashley Eden said of that peasantry in 1877, after an extended tour in the interior:—

"Great as was the progress which I knew had been made in the position of the cultivating classes, I was quite unprepared to find them occupying a position so different from that which I remember them to occupy when I first came to the country. They were then poor and oppressed, with little incentive to increase the productive powers of the soil. I find them now as prosperous, as independent, and as comfortable as the peasantry, I believe, of any country in the world; well-fed, well-clothed, free to enjoy the full benefit of their labour, and able to hold their own or obtain prompt redress for any wrong."

Such is the condition of the class, for whose "protection and welfare" Mr. Ilbert now declares that it is absolutely necessary for the Government to interfere to take the strong measures indicated in the Bill, and to shake the confidence of the whole of India in the most solemn pledges of the British Nation.

No words of mine could add any strength to the clear, unfaltering testimony of the first living authority on the subject. Still, I may be permitted to say this much, that I have lived for years in the rural districts of Central Bengal, and that in regard to those districts at least I can vouch for the absolute accuracy of Sir Ashley Eden's description. I have always found the Bengal ryot a shrewd, happy, business-like fellow: given to extravagance, no doubt, on great occasions when excuse offers—extravagance that would most certainly induce him to sell his lot to the nearest money-lender the moment he got the chance, and eat or marry it all up—but otherwise fairly prosperous, thoroughly contented, and altogether fully able to look after his own interests. To that peasantry I would most unhesitatingly apply the apt description I once heard our noble chairman give of them—Beati nimium sua si bona norint; and more, I am very sure they do on the whole recognise the comparative happiness of their lot, if only the doctrinaires and the agitators will let them alone.

And to what condition would you reduce them, by this measure for their "protection and welfare?" Out of Mr. Ilbert's own mouth I have shown you that there is an exceedingly good chance of their being degraded to the position of under-tenants with no rights of any kind against anyone—that is, to the condition of serfs. And to those who blindly hope for an improvement of the position of the cultivators under any fiscal system other than that of a Permanent Settlement, I would suggest a perusal of the Duke of Argyll's despatch on the Road Cess question; and I would say. Do you wish to see introduced into Bengal the state of affairs that prevails in the Deccan, for which every now and then we are driven by sheer humanity to enact Ryot Relief Acts of sorts? Only a few months ago we heard a good deal about the Deccan peasantry from Sir William Wedderburn, when he called on us to deliver them from the clutches of the ubiquitous and all-powerful moneylenders, by the doubtful device of setting up land-banks to compete with the mahajan. Sir William Wedderburn showed us very clearly how badly the ryots need relief, and how enormous is the interest they have to pay, with the kind of security they have to offer:—

"In the Deccan the ordinary monthly rates of interest are 1, 2, and 3 per cent., according to the credit of the borrower; that is, the ryot with good credit can get money at 12 per cent. per annum; the man of middling condition pays 24 per cent.; while 36 per cent. and even more is demanded from the man who needs money badly. For the average borrower we may take 24 per cent. as the rate. And it is quite evident that no system of agriculture can pay if burdened with such a charge upon the capital employed. . . . Again, compound interest mounts up if, owing to bad seasons, payments fall into arrears. And finally, when the debtor gets into serious difficulty he is sued in the civil court, which, as we all know, is an expensive process. For a claim of Rs. 100 court fees of sorts amount to about Rs. 25, and there are besides heavy incidental costs, all of which ultimately fall upon the debtor. Under these circumstances we cannot wonder that one peasant after another becomes embarrassed, and that having once stumbled he finds it hard to get upon his feet again. Indeed, the wonder is how the ryot can maintain himself at all."

And how is it that he has to pay such enormous interest? Doubtless in India, competition among the sowcars is not so keen as altogether to exclude considerations of custom; but still I think we may take it for granted that, in India as elsewhere, high interest means doubtful security. And what did Sir William Wedderburn tell us about it? He said of the Deccani ryot:—

"He is indeed the absolute proprietor of his holding subject to the payment of the Government Assessment; and if this Government demand were either fixed or limited in a definite way, the security would be good; but this is not the case, the demand being liable after every thirty years to an enhancement which may swallow up the margin of profit upon which the mortgagee depends. The theory no doubt is that the enhancement will not touch improvements made by the holder, and those who support the existing land system maintain that in practice the demand is not increased except on fair and sufficient grounds. But I feel bound to admit that this view of the case is not accepted either by the ryot himself or by those who would otherwise be willing to invest their savings in land."

Here then, in the lack of fixity in the Government demand, is shown to lie the root of all these terrible sufferings, for which we have to devise measures of relief in Ryot Relief Acts or Land-banks. But how far worse will be the position of the Bengal cultivator under this Bill of Mr. Ilbert's for his "protection and welfare?" For his real landlord will be the money-lender who has bought the occupancy right, obviously with the intention of dealing with the land on strictly commercial principles. The money-lender, in his new capacity of landlord, will not be trammelled by any of those "sentimental" considerations which so often moderate the rigour of commercial transactions between landlord and tenant, when the relations between them have subsisted from generation to generation. The Government officer is bound by his conscience and his duty to the State to be simply a machine in carrying out the orders of the Government without respect of persons; and the mahajan landlord is also bound by his commercial principles to be a rack-renter, against whom the actual cultivator is to have absolutely no protection from the law, and whose demands will cease only when there is nothing more to be squeezed. Nor are those demands likely to be moderated by the fact that this new class of landed proprietors will be liable in their turn to be squeezed by the demands of Government without any of the awkward restrictions of the Permanent Settlement.

And it seems to me a very significant point, to be considered in estimating the value of Mr. Ilbert's anxiety for the "protection and welfare" of the ryot in the abstract, that we hear nothing about these philanthropic measures, of transferability of tenure and the like, in the North Western Provinces or elsewhere, where the Government revenue would certainly be affected by them. Even Mr. Hunter, a thick-and-thin supporter of Lord Ripon's policy, complained the other day, in the debate in Council on the Central Provinces Land Bill, that the twelve years' occupancy-right had been abolished by that Bill, out of regard for the Government's interests as a landlord! Mr. Ilbert feels that all these privileges are absolutely necessary for the ryot in Bengal, where they come out of the pockets of the zemindars; but they lose their sovereign virtue in every province where the Government stands in the place of the zemindars, and also even in Bengal, in Government estates. And yet, if a title of what we have heard of the periodical settlements in some of these provinces be true, the Government might fairly take the beam out of its own eye before meddling with the mote in the zemindar's eye. For instance, the Raja Shiva Prasad of Benares told a story in Council the other day about a settlement made by Sir Auckland Colvin, which requires additional interest, now that Sir Auckland has become Finance Minister:—

"I have heard," said the Raja, "though I will not vouch for its exact authenticity, that a zemindar in the Allahabad district, finding the rates fixed by Sir Auckland Colvin when he was Settlement Officer there, unrealistic, and being thus unable to pay the Government demand, made a bequest of that village in favour of Sir Auckland and left it."

Is not the Raja well within his right, when he prays Lord Ripon to go to "the provinces where the Government is an interested party and shares in the rise or fall of the rent," and there first of all introduce such provisions as those of "The Bengal Tenancy Act?" "Then," he rightly concludes, "and only then, would the Government be justified in coming forward in the permanently settled provinces, and telling the zemindars, 'Friends, you also cannot go beyond that.'"

Mr. Ilbert and his supporters are very strong on the "magic of property," which is to turn every ryot in Bengal into a thrifty peasant, as soon as he has been endowed with "property," transferred from the landlord's pocket to his own. Well, even if we doubt the morality of the means, it may be admitted that the dream of a thrifty well-to-do peasantry, above the reach of poverty, and free from all the evils that result from over-population or prodigality, is one that may well strike the imaginations of Mr. Ilbert and Lord Ripon. But how is it that they have not the same bright dreams for the peasantry of those provinces where the "magic of property" would have to be conjured out of the pockets of the Government? Why, simply because the Government sees clearly enough the futility of these socialistic visions, when it has to pay for the experiments itself.

Surely, the truth of the matter is this: that the dole of a lump sum, taken from the zemindar and transferred without consideration to the ryot, will not change the nature of the latter one whit, save, too probably, in the direction of demoralisation. That it will give a most unwholesome stimulus to over-population, already the great difficulty of our humane and peaceful régime, is certain. The thrifty, industrious, and self-denying ryot of Bengal is already—as Sir Ashley Eden has shown—in a position to be envied by the peasant of any other country in the world. By unjustly giving him money, or the equivalent of money, which he will feel does not belong to him, you only tempt him to forsake that mode of life by which his present prosperity is assured, whilst in the case of the unthrifty and the prodigal the boon will be a fatal one indeed. The burdens contracted during the short bout of fancied wealth will weigh upon him long after the sale of his tenure has left him not only without means, but also without credit—divested of all legal rights against his new landlord, and virtually in the condition of a serf. Mr. Ilbert's anxiety for the "protection and welfare" of the tenant allows him to respect the laws of political economy in provinces where Government is virtually the landlord; but those laws are to be relegated to another planet in the province of Bengal, where the zemindars can be made to pay the piper. As Mr. Sub-Judge Bhatta observes, with bitter sarcasm, in his examination of this Bill:—

"If the laws of political economy are to be resisted, to be of any effect they ought to be resisted in their entirety. There ought to be a check upon population by means of stringent marriage laws. There ought to be protection given to native arts and industries. There ought to be organised migration of the surplus population to parts thinly populated. Instead of that the freedom of marriage in the most obnoxious form is allowed as ever. The principles of free trade introduced into the country ruined the artisan classes and threw them upon the land. The last semblance of protection in the shape of a small import duty was taken away at last, and no impetus to export trade in the principal produce of the country was given by removing the export duty on rice. The demand for increased food to feed an increased population gives no rest to land and exhausts its productive powers. Hence we see the necessary consequences of over-population, viz., the famines, pestilence, the epidemics, the poverty for which the landlords are not in the least responsible, for otherwise why are they more frequent in places where there is no Permanent Settlement? They are often the result of providential visitations such as successive droughts or inundations. All arguments drawn from famines for putting a check upon free adjustment of rent are, therefore, as it seems to me, inapplicable to the nature of the case. Such checks may impoverish or at least keep in statu quo the landlords without any improvement in their condition, but cannot improve the condition of ryots for any length of time. If increase of population is not checked and no new fields for labour and industry are opened, the same difficulties will present themselves in a few years."

And lastly, under the proposed law, not only will the unhappy cultivator of Bengal be left absolutely at the mercy of the middlemen, who have bought the occupancy rights, and who will have neither sympathy with nor interest in him—not only will he be lured to his ruin by a boon which will certainly prove illusory, and which most will regard as immoral—but he will infallibly be overwhelmed by a terrible increase of that which is already a veritable curse to him, the costliness of our cumbrous legal processes. Hear what is the opinion on this point of the venerated Babu Joy Kissen Mookerjee, who is by universal consent one of the most kind-hearted, liberal, and enlightened gentlemen in Bengal:—

"No Bengal Rent Bill could have been drafted in such gross ignorance of the history, condition, and circumstances of the people, in such wanton violation of vested rights, and in such utter want of foresight of the practical results of its operation as the Bill in question. While the great curse of the ryot continues to be the large amount of process and other fees which, by swelling his liability in simple rent suits, in many cases, to four or five times the amount of arrears of rent, increase the revenues of Government. The practical effect of the Bill will be to increase litigation to an alarming extent, and to place ryots at the mercy of petty-fogging touters and mookhteers."

And this is the Bill, the confiscatory operation of which is to be excused on the ground of the "protection" it will afford to the ryot.

ARGUMENTS FOR THE BILL.—(3) INIQUITIES OF THE ZEMINDAR

The amazing article in support of this Bill, which appeared in the Contemporary Review, and to which I have already referred, bases its contention largely on the alleged illegal exactions and oppressions of the zemindars. "The ryot," we are told, with a fine generalisation—

"The ryot pays a fee for everything he does himself, and for everything the zemindar does not do for himself or the ryot, and makes the ryot do for him. There is a Bengali proverb, 'The same love that the Mahomedan has to his fowl (he fittens it in order to kill it), the same the zemindar has to the ryot.' But the proverb lies, for the zemindar does not even fatten his ryot. 'Who stole the goose from the common? The common man. But who stole the common from the goose?' The lord."

And so on, through many pages of the most unmitigated slander of a whole class. There are, indeed, one or two grudging sentences of qualification in the course of the article; and in one of these, the writer considerably admits that there are very many zemindars "who have not pushed their powers of exaction to the extreme limit." To us who know Bengal, these wild statements only provoke a smile; but it seems to me that a very heavy responsibility rests on the supporters of the Bill, in allowing them to be put about among the ill-informed people of England as arguments for the Bill without contradiction. I need not say that Mr. Ilbert in his Statement of Objects and Reasons offers no such arguments. The phrase I have already quoted, about some alleged rack-rents and quasi-feudal oppression in Behar, is all I can find of this sort. And this is well; for it is only necessary for us to go back to the early history of the very Bill before us, and to the speeches of one of the prime authors of the Bill, Mr. Mackenzie (formerly Secretary to the Government of Bengal, now Secretary to the Government of India in the Home Department), to prove how utterly false are the slanders of those who would support the Bill on this ground.

When Mr. Mackenzie introduced into the Bengal Council the "Rent Bill," which was the present Bill in its embryo form, this is how he described the broad features of the existing law of Landlord and Tenant, as embodied in Act x. of 1859 and its more recent corollary:—

"In 1859 the legislative pendulum swung quite to the opposite extreme. Summary arrests of defaulters were forbidden. Distraints were so fenced in with difficulties as to become quite unpracticable. Zemindars were prohibited from compelling the attendance of their tenants to settle their accounts or pay their rents, and both parties were relegated to formal suits in the Courts, at first in that of the Collector, and since 1869 in that of the Civil Judge. It was the opinion of many competent Judges, even at the time, that this re-action was too violent; that sufficient consideration was not given to the difficulties of the zemindar's position; that the character of the ryot, say, for instance, in Backergunge, is not by any means so 'child-like and bland' as to warrant the confidence which the law places in his anxiety to pay his rent as it falls due. As I explained to the Council before, the difficulties of landlords have become greater year by year, while the pressure put upon them by Government has become heavier, and they stand now urgently in need of assistance from the Legislature."

These are the ipsissima verba of Mr. Mackenzie, Lord Ripon's Home Secretary at the present moment. And at an earlier period, in April, 1877, the Government of Bengal, writing to the Government of India, through Mr. Secretary Reynolds, stated:—

"The replies which have been received to the circular in which this Government invited an expression of opinion on the Bill, sufficiently show that under the present procedure the recovery of rent by legal process, even when the arrear is not disputed, is so tedious and costly as practically, in many cases, to involve a denial of justice. If the ryots of a village combine to offer a passive resistance to the landlord by withholding all payment of rent, he can only realise his dues by a suit in the Civil Court against each individual cultivator. It is the object of the ryots to delay a final decision as long as possible, and the procedure of a Civil Suit affords them many facilities for doing so. In the meantime the zemindar, though thus kept out of his own dues, is compelled to pay Government revenue on pain of losing his estate, and, under the pressure thus put upon him, he is sometimes obliged to accede to the demands of the ryots, and to forego claims which he would have been able to establish under a more expeditious legal procedure, or he is forced to borrow money, at ruinous rates of interest, to enable him to meet the Government demand."

This is hardly the picture of a zemindar who loves his ryot only as a Mahomedan loves his fowl! And what, seriously, are the facts of the case? Of course there are bad zemindars as well as good, just as there are bad ryots as well as good; but surely, the truth is not to be found in such sweeping assertions as those of the Contemporary reviewer, or even in Mr. Ilbert's mild generalities about "quasi-feudal oppressions." Those of us who have lived in Bengal, and have watched the relations between the zemindars and their ryots, will, I am sure, agree with what Sir Ashley Eden told the Behar Association—and what the Maharajah of Darbhanga and every other native nobleman and gentleman of the Viceroy's Council assured Lord Ripon was the case—that, with the spread of enlightenment and liberality among the upper classes, and the greatly increased intelligence of the ryots, the "quasi-feudal oppressions" of which Mr. Ilbert spoke have virtually become things of the past.

Then, too, we are well aware that very many things, that have borne to English eyes the aspect of improper exactions, have been really nothing more than customary arrangements for the mutual convenience of landlord and tenant, perfectly equitable in themselves, and usually recommended by very tangible advantages of simplicity or cheapness. As to abwabs and illegal cesses, I am not here to defend them in the slightest degree, nor is such defence any part of the case against the Bengal Tenancy Bill; but this I may say, I am very confident that where any irregular cesses are nowadays submitted to by the ryots of Bengal, those cesses are in reality nothing more than the equitable balance of a rental that would otherwise be inadequate and be liable to enhancement by a costly process in Court.

Much, too, has been made of an irregular form of distraint, without the necessary legal notice, that was undoubtedly not uncommon in Behar prior to the year 1876. But it must be remembered in the first place, that this irregularity is now fairly obsolete; and in the second place, that it was invariably practised on the estates under Government management, as, for instance (as the Maharajah of Darbhanga informed the Council) on the Darbhanga estates during the period of the minority of the Maharajah. It is all very well to tell the zemindars loftily that the evil example of the British Government affords them no excuse for similar ill-doing; but as a fact we all know that, in a country like India, the sanction of the State is quite sufficient to give to a custom something very like the force of law, and it is simply absurd to suppose that an ordinary zemindar would believe himself to be doing anything very wrong in following a procedure regularly and avowedly adopted on all the Government estates in his neighbourhood.

Of the public spirit, liberality, and philanthropy that have at all times been displayed by the zemindars as a body, the annals of Bengal bear ample testimony; and for this we need not go further back than to Sir Richard Temple's minute on the famine of 1873-74. As I look back through the history of Bengal during the last eighty years, I find the record of such amazing material improvement of the country by these very same much-abused zemindars, as can hardly be surpassed in the history of the world. At the time of the Permanent Settlement, as we learn from a note of Mr. Pattle, a most distinguished fiscal officer of the East India Company, the country of Bengal was little better than one vast jungle, infested by wild beasts, with cultivation only in patches, and communications dangerous or impracticable. Whose capital is it, I ask, that has cleared and cultivated the land?—that has dug tanks, drained marshes, erected bunds, constructed roads?—that has, in short, not only made the country habitable, but has turned the swampy forest into a smiling rice-plain? And I find these same zemindars always foremost in all good works, whether for education, for famine-relief, or what not. When I was principal of the Kishnagur State College, and the Government had been unable to do full justice to that college for want of funds, the zemindars of the Nuddea and neighbouring districts nobly came forward as one man in answer to my appeal, and provided a munificent endowment. The educational foundations of the great Tagore family, of the Maharajahs of Burdwan, Darbhanga, and Hutwa, and of many other houses, have been on a princely scale. In no country in the world are schools, charitable hospitals, and dispensaries, and similar benevolent institutions more generously supported by the land-owners than in Bengal; and Sir Richard Temple's report bears striking testimony to the magnificent efforts made by these zemindars at the time of the great famine—how they came forward with lakhs and lakhs of rupees for relief-works, and for other useful purposes. Every square inch of land that was then required by the State, for the making of roads or the construction of tanks in the course of the famine operations, was freely and gratuitously given. Altogether, I trust it will be admitted that the munificence of the Bengal zemindars in works of benevolence among their tenants, and their educational endowments, are a glorious monument of the public spirit of that community.

THE SOLEMN PLEDGES OF THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT IN THE PERMANENT SETTLEMENT.

The last point to which I would direct your attention, in Mr. Ilbert's defence of this most unrighteous Bill, is that wherein he impugns the position of the zemindars at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and throws doubt on the extent of the rights conferred upon them under that Settlement. I confess that this seems to me the most regrettable part of the whole business. I am not inclined to dispute the inherent right of Government to legislate—even to the extent of confiscation—for what it may consider to be "the protection and welfare" of its subjects. If Lord Ripon's Government has made up its mind to abrogate the Permanent Settlement, either with or without compensation to those who now benefit under that Settlement, the decision should be plainly stated, and the justification for it (if any there be) distinctly shown. But the Statement of Objects and Reasons seems to me to exhibit, on this point, a curious struggle between greed and timidity. It professes not to infringe the Permanent Settlement; and yet at the same time endeavours to show that the Permanent Settlement was, after all, only a solemn sham, and that in reality it neither conferred nor confirmed any of those proprietary rights which the Statesmen and Judges of the last ninety years have erroneously supposed to have been assured by it to the zemindars.

It is universally admitted that the Permanent Settlement was at first exceedingly favourable to the Government, and exceedingly hard on the zemindars; indeed, it is not denied that very nearly every great family in Bengal was ruined by it, and that the bulk of the land changed hands under its early operation. It seems, therefore, obvious that the Government ought to make out a very strong case indeed against it before tampering with its provisions, now that at last the advantage has gone round to the side of the zemindars from that of the Government. Not that it is to be supposed that, even now, the revenue does not gain from the general prosperity—the freedom from Deccan Ryots Relief Acts and the like—that has resulted from it. On the contrary, I imagine no one could read the famous despatch of the Duke of Argyll on the Road Cess, without feeling convinced that the Government must, sooner or later, extend, rather than contract, the limits of the Bengal land revenue system.

But what is the view of that system that is taken by Mr. Ilbert and the Government of India?—and wherein does it differ from that which has hitherto been taken, not only by the zemindars themselves, but also, as the Chief Justice of Bengal points out, by all "the legislators, judges, and statesmen who, from time to time, have expounded and enunciated the law since the days of the Permanent Settlement?"

A zemindar, has the privilege, under that Settlement, of paying to Government annually a certain amount of revenue (x), in respect of certain property in land (y), of which the Permanent Settlement regulations over and over again call him the "proprietor." Thus, the fourth Section of Regulation I of 1793 is as follows:—

"The Governor General in Council declares to the zemindars, independent talukdars, and other actual proprietors of land, that no alteration will be made in the assessment which they have respectively engaged to pay, but that they and their heirs and lawful successors will be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever."

And Section 7, Clause 2, of the same Regulation is as follows:—

"The Governor General trusts that the proprietors of land, sensible of the benefits conferred upon them by the public assessment being fixed for ever, will exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands under the certainty that they will enjoy exclusively the fruit of their own good management and industry. To discharge the revenues at the stipulated periods without delay or evasion, and to conduct themselves with good faith and moderation towards their dependent talukdars and ryots, are duties at all times indispensably required from the proprietors of land, and a strict observance of these duties is now more than ever incumbent upon them, in return for the benefits which they will themselves derive from the orders now issued."

And again, Section I of Regulation II. of 1793 says:—

"Government must divest itself of the power of infringing in its executive capacity the rights and privileges which, as exercising the legislative authority, it has conferred on the landholders. No power will then exist in the country by which the rights vested in the landholders by the Regulation can be infringed, or the value of landed property affected."

Now, Mr. Ilbert tells us, in his speech in Council, that we have all along been using the term "proprietor" in a sense that it ought never to have been used in; and he declares that it means not "proprietor" at all, as some people vainly think, but "the person whom for purposes of land revenue, and for this purpose only, the Government find it convenient and advisable to treat as owner or proprietor of the land!" Beautiful! I really must ask you to let me read the whole passage. These are Mr. Ilbert's words:—

"In the first place, the term, as applied to land, has no technical meaning in English law, and if you were to ask an English lawyer what were the rights in the soil of proprietor of land he would probably tell you that you were using loose and popular language, and would beg you to make your meaning more precise and clear. In the next place, the term was freely applied to the zemindars of Bengal and other persons of the same class in Regulations and other official documents of a date anterior to 1793, and, therefore, could not possibly be taken as indicating or, to use a technical term, connoting rights created at that date. And, thirdly, the term, though, as I have said, it has no technical meaning in England, has acquired a very definite meaning in the settlement literature of British India. It means in those parts of India which are not permanently settled, the person who, whatever may be his rights on the soil, has the right of having a settlement made with him, the person, namely, whom for purposes of land revenue, and for this purpose only, the Government find it convenient and advisable to treat as owner or proprietor of the land. Such a recognition, of course, is not inconsistent, and was never supposed to be inconsistent, with the existence of any number of other rights in any number of other persons. All such rights are simply left outstanding. The use of the term proprietor in this sense is closely analogous to the use of similar terms of English statute law. Here, for instance, is a definition of owner taken from a recent English Act, the Public Health Act, 1875:—'Owner means the person for the time being receiving the rack-rent of the lands or premises in connection with which the word is used, whether on his account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would so receive the same if such lands or premises were let at a rack-rent.'

Of course, after whittling down the "proprietaryship" of the unfortunate Bengal zemindar to such extremely shadowy proportions as this, Mr. Ilbert finds no difficulty in banging about the Permanent Settlement in such a way that the reader begins to wonder why in the world so much fuss has been made about a covenant so impotent and meaningless. He admits indeed that the zemindar A is "the person who, whatever may be his rights on the soil, has the right of having a settlement made with him" (sic).—that is, A has the "right" to pay  $x$  rupees annually to the Government! And Mr. Ilbert does not, apparently, see his way at present to any direct increase of the payment  $x$  in respect of the landed property  $p$ . But no difficulty is insoluble to the ingenuity that reads in the word "proprietaryship" a "right" to pay; and so Mr. Ilbert promptly discovers that though Government can only take  $x$  rupees annually from A in respect of  $p$ , it can take away a part of  $p$  from A, give that part to B, and then merrily tax B, while A still retains his "right" to be taxed to the full extent of  $x$ !

The ingenuity here displayed is a fitting sequel of that which, twelve years ago, discovered that, though the Permanent Settlement prohibited the imposition of new taxes on the land, it did not prohibit the imposition of cesses, such as a road cess and a public works cess! And it may be worth while here to quote two or three of the recorded opinions of members of the Indian Council on that former very questionable proceeding:—

SIR ERSKINE PERRY said: "The language and acts of Lord Cornwallis and the Government of the day were so distinct, solemn, and unambiguous, that it would be a direct violation of British faith to impose special taxes in the manner proposed."

SIR FREDERICK HALLIDAY said: To affirm that the right to impose these taxes, in the face of the promises of the Permanent Settlement, had already been ruled and decided in the case of the income tax, is as much as to say that, because in 1860 a general tax was temporarily imposed affecting all classes, therefore a special tax may now be permanently levied on one class only, although that class has been solemnly assured that no new tax and arbitrary exaction shall ever be laid upon it."

MR. H. T. PRINSEP said: "The policy inaugurated and the measure sanctioned will shake the confidence hitherto felt in the honesty and good faith of the Government."

MR. R. D. MANGLES said: "We have no standing ground in India except brute force, if we forfeit our character for truth."

SIR FREDERICK CURRIE said: "The plea that these territorial obligations cannot be made by the Imperial revenue, is a cogent reason for retrenchment and economy; but it cannot justify our laying a special tax on the zemindars of Bengal, to do which would be a breach of faith and the violation of the statutory engagement made at the Permanent Settlement."

Mr. Ilbert's delicate refinements about the exact force of the term "proprietor" have naturally been improved upon by his zealous supporters; until at last we find, in the Contemporary Review article, to which I have already referred, the very broad and honest statement:—

"The zemindars were not originally proprietors or landlords; and it may be shown beyond contradiction that they were not made so by the Permanent Settlement in the sense of absolute owners of the soil."

And other writers—doubtless misled by the fact that during the periods when the revenues of Bengal were farmed, the great landholders were properly and wisely chosen for the office of revenue farmer—have grown to speak of the ancient position of the zemindar as if it were historically recognised as that of a mere publican or taxgatherer.

Now, apart from any possible quibbling about the legal force of the words "absolute owners," a very few sentences from the dicta of the highest possible contemporaneous authorities will be sufficient to expose the hollowness of all this verbal trickery. Seventeen years before the date of the Permanent Settlement, Mr. Francis, afterwards Sir Philip Francis, wrote in 1776:—

"The inheritable quality of the lands is alone sufficient to prove that they are the property of the zemindars, taluqdars, and others, to whom they have descended by a long course of inheritance. The right of the Sovereign is founded on conquest, by which he succeeds only to the State of the conquered Prince; unless, in the first instance, he resolves to appropriate and transfer all private property, by an act of power, in virtue of his conquest. So barbarous an idea is equally inconsistent with the manners and policy of the British nation. When the Moguls conquered Bengal, there is no mention, in any historical account, that they dispossessed the zemindars of this land, though it is frequently observed that where they voluntarily came in and submitted to the new Government, they were received with marks of honour, and that means were used to gain and secure their attachment."

This was what was understood by "proprietaryship" in the time of Warren Hastings, before the English language had arrived at that perfection of subtlety which we observe in Mr. Ilbert's speech. We can hardly feel surprised if the Maharajahs of Behar, in the very clear and straightforward exposition of their case which they have sent to England to be presented to Parliament, indignantly brush aside all these unworthy sophistries to which I have alluded:—

"It is not the intention of your Petitioners to enter into a long and profitless discussion as to the original status of the zemindars of the country. When the British Government assumed the direct administration of Bengal and Behar in 1772, they at any rate found the zemindars in possession of large estates and exercising the ordinary rights of proprietors. Some of the Rajahs of Behar date their origin from times anterior to the conquests of Bengal by the Mahomedans, while others have received proprietary grants and titles of honour from the Emperor Akbar, who was a contemporary of Queen Elizabeth. During the long period of Mahomedan domination, their rights as proprietors were never questioned, and the fact that in Behar the land is mainly held by Hindoo proprietors shows how little the Mahomedans interfered with the vested rights of the people. Nor did the British Government, on succeeding to the administration of the country, make any change in the system of policy of their Mahomedan predecessors. The system was this:—The Government claimed, as a ruling power, a certain proportion of the produce of every beegha of land in the country. This proportion, whether paid in kind or estimated in money, was collected by the zemindars from the cultivators. It was the duty of the zemindar to pay into the treasury the amount assessed on his zemindary as the Government share of the produce, but subject to the payment of this amount, he exercised full proprietary rights over his tenantry. All that he collected from the ryots over and above the Government assessment was his own. The charge of the police and the administration of justice were in his hands, and there were no local tribunals to which the ryots could appeal for redress, if they desired to question the justice of his demands."

What was the opinion of Mr. Shore (afterwards Lord Teignmouth) at the time of the arrangement of the Permanent Settlement, which was so largely his work, though he disapproved of many of its details? These are his recorded words:—

"I consider the zemindars as the proprietors of the soil, to the property of which they succeed by the right of inheritance, according to the laws of their own religion; and that the sovereign authority cannot justly exercise the power of depriving them of the succession, nor of altering it when there are any legal heirs. The privilege of disposing of the land by sale or mortgage is derived from this fundamental right, and was exercised by the zemindars before we acquired the Diwani."

Next, I will give an extract from the minute of Lord Cornwallis himself, dated Sept. 18, 1789. He says:—

"Mr. Shore has most ably, and, in my opinion, most successfully, in his minute delivered in June last, argued in favour of the rights of zemindars to the property of the soil. But, if the value of permanency is to be withdrawn from the settlement under agitation, of what avail will the power of his arguments be to the zemindars for whose rights he has contended."

Again, his Lordship writes:—

"Altogether, however, I am not only of opinion that the zemindars have the best right, but from being persuaded that nothing could be so ruinous to the public interest as that the land should be retained the property of Government, I am also convinced that, failing the claim of right of the zemindars, it would be necessary for the public good to grant a right of property in the soil to them, or to persons of other descriptions. I think it unnecessary to enter into any discussion of the grounds upon which their right appears to be founded."

So much for the views of the authors of the Permanent Settlement as to its pledges, and the rights conferred, or rather confirmed by it. They charmingly illustrate that "smartest" of all Mr. Ilbert's "smart" arguments that, because the zemindars were "proprietors" before the Permanent Settlement, therefore that Settlement could not have created proprietary rights!

And lastly, how have these pledges been construed by those high judicial authorities who have subsequently had to interpret the law in regard to them? Do they follow Sir Phillip Francis, Lord Cornwallis, and Mr. Shore; or do they incline to the novel views about proprietaryship that find favour with Mr. Ilbert and the Government of India? I need only quote one such interpretation, that of Lord Lyndhurst, for his authority is so weighty, and his words are so clear, that they seem to me to settle the question. That learned Judge, as reported in "Moor's Indian Appeals," Vol. I, p. 348, says:—

"It is to be gleaned from these Regulations that the proprietors of lands in India had an absolute ownership and dominion of the soil, that the soil was not vested generally in the Sovereign, that proprietors did not hold it at the will of the Sovereign, but held the property as their own. . . . I think it is impossible to read these articles without coming to the conclusion that the zemindars and taluqdars were owners of the soil, subject only to a tribute, and that it was the object of the Regulation to make that tribute fixed and permanent."

CONCLUSION.

I VENTURE to think these quotations are sufficient to show how solemn were the pledges made by the British Government ninety years ago to the zemindars of Bengal; and further, to show that those pledges have always been understood by the greatest English statesmen and judges in the sense assigned to them by those to whom they were made—in the sense, that is to say, which plain Englishmen would certainly assign to the plain English in which they were written—and not in a sense which would understand the word "proprietor" to imply no other right than that of paying the Government revenue demand. It is entirely unnecessary for me, or for those who join me in denouncing this Bill, to insist on the absolute finality of the beneficent legislation in which those pledges were embodied. But I claim to have shown that, rightly or wrongly, wisely or unwisely, the British Government, in the time of Lord Cornwallis, did make the most extraordinary solemn promises to the landowners of Bengal, did believe that those promises would be held binding on us (in the very words of the Regulations) "for ever," and did persuade the zemindars to trust in the "permanence" of this settlement. I have shown you what the statesmen of the time, such as Lord Cornwallis himself and Sir John Shore, understood by the term "proprietor" which they used so freely; I have shown you how entirely the judges, who have had to interpret the law, such as Lord Lyndhurst, Sir Barnes Peacock, and Sir Richard Garth, have confirmed the original interpretation of the authors of the law; and I have quoted to you Mr. Ilbert's own words, that you may judge how divergent the opinions of the present Government of India are from those of the statesmen and legislators who have preceded them. Next, I have mentioned the chief points to which we make objection in the proposed Bill; and I ask you to say whether an arrangement that deprives the landowners of all effective control over the land that is nominally theirs—an arrangement that leaves them all the responsibility towards the Government, whilst it throws insuperable difficulties in the way of their choosing good tenants (or even of refusing hostile tenants), of securing adequate rents, of obtaining prompt payment, of getting deliverance from turbulent or dishonest tenants—I ask you to say whether such an arrangement as this is not an outrageous violation of all those pledges, on the faith of which land in Bengal has been bought and sold, has been dealt with by the Legislature, and been adjudicated upon by the Courts, for the last ninety years?

But the wanton injury done to the landlords, whose "rights, whose social position, nay, whose very means of living are at stake," as the Maharajah Sir Jotendro Mohan Tagore plainly declared at a late meeting of the British Indian Association—the political and social suppression, not only of what remains of the ancient landed aristocracy, but also of that loyal aristocracy of younger growth, that has struck its roots deep into the land under the protection (hitherto faithful and recorded) of our own beneficent rule—the transformation of the whole body of trustworthy, responsible, public-spirited, and benevolent landlords into a community of disappointed, betrayed, and disaffected men—these are not the worst effects that will follow from this Bill becoming law. I am not sure, even, whether the deadly blow this legislation will strike at "the confidence hitherto felt in the honesty and good faith of the Government," will be the worst part of this bad business; though I am sure we shall all agree with the sentiments on this head, which I have quoted from the minutes of Sir Erskine Perry, Mr. Prinsep, Mr. Mangles, and other great authorities. But what remains, after all this injury and wrong has been done? I claim to have shown that, in all human probability, you will have effaced the present land system in Bengal, to give the soil and its cultivators over as a prey to money-lenders and land-jobbers, who will rack-rent their under-tenants on purely commercial principles. And I claim to have shown that the result of all this must be to degrade the peasantry, now fairly and progressively prosperous, to a condition hardly better than serfdom, deprived of all the rights they are now thriving on, and ground down under the worst of all oppression, the irresponsible will of grasping and unsympathetic upstarts.

The Noble CHAIRMAN said: Ladies and Gentlemen,—The paper which Mr. Lethbridge has read to you is so exhaustive, and goes into so many details that, agreeing with it entirely as I do, it leaves me very little to say, and great difficulty to avoid repeating what he has already so well said to you. The motive popularly assigned in this country for introducing the Bengal Tenancy Bill, that it is needed on account of the miseries of the ryots, is not put forward by the Indian Government, and could not well be alleged by them in the face of the official statements recently made as to the improvement and prosperity of the districts to be affected by this Bill. Mr. Allardye (who is quite familiar with this subject, and whose unavoidable absence to-day is to be regretted) confirms those official statements in his vivid pictures of Bengal village life in his "City and Sunshine." Everybody is prosperous except those who had dealings with Rutton Pal the spirit-seller, and Tin Cowry, the money-lender. There is a fallacy underlying most of the arguments used in support of this Bill, which dates from the last century, and which is now revived for the very purpose for which it was originated. It is this—that the zemindars were not landholders in our sense, but simply Government tax-collectors, and that Lord Cornwallis, by the perpetual settlement, converted them into landowners. Now, if that is the case, how is it that they are called zemindars at all? Zemindar is a Persian word, which is the exact equivalent of our word landholder, and surely it would not have been the term in use if the people so designated had only been Government tax-collectors. Mr. Francis's minute of November 5, 1794, entered on the Bengal Revenue Consultations, and the minute of April 2, 1788, of Mr. Shore, sufficiently disprove the allegation that the zemindars were not hereditary landowners. There is no more truth in calling the Bengal zemindars tax-collectors than there would be in so naming the owners of large estates in this country, if they were in the habit of paying the income-tax of their tenants, along with their own, to the Government officers. But this is after all immaterial since the old zemindars of the time of the Permanent Settlement have all been ruined, and their estates have all been acquired by purchase, on the faith of the Settlement and the Government Regulations, by the present holders of the zemindaries. The very exaggerated statements that have been made as to the wealth of these zemindars have already been referred to in the paper read to the meeting. The Hindoo Patriot, which quotes them, has taken them from Mr. Grote's "Tables of the Zemindars," and also from Income Tax returns, so that they may be relied upon as correct. Another misapprehension has arisen from the habit of those who seek to undermine the Perpetual Settlement of fathering that Act entirely on Lord Cornwallis, whilst accusing him of ignorance and blundering. It is now known from the Cornwallis correspondence that this measure, though supported by Lord Cornwallis, originated with the Board of Control, and that Mr. Henry Dundas induced Mr. Pitt to become his partner in the final consideration of this important measure; and, as he wrote to Lord Cornwallis, "He accordingly agreed to shut himself up with me for ten days at Wimbledon and attend to that business only. Charles Grant stayed with us a great part of the time. After a most minute and attentive consideration of the whole subject, I had the satisfaction to find Mr. Pitt entirely of the same opinion with us." That extract is from Ross' "Cornwallis Correspondence." The effects of this Bill will be equally disastrous to zemindars and ryots. Whilst (as by the Irish dealings of the Government) the ryots will be encouraged to be dilatory in their payments, the old law requiring the zemindar to make his payments to Government by sunset of a certain day or else forfeit his property is not modified. In Ireland, where certain payments have to be made to the Government, the Government content itself with 4 per cent. or any payment during the time it is delayed. They might have extended some such mercy to the zemindar. There is, however, no modification of this old law, although as regards the central provinces for which a Tenancy Act has recently passed, a resolution has been adopted by Lord Ripon's Government for the suspension and remission of revenue in bad seasons. If this is to be adopted all over India, why is there not some mention of this in the Bengal Tenancy Bill? The ryots having a property unexpectedly given them to sell, will most likely sell it either to the Indigo planters or to the spirit dealers, whose increase Mr. Cross contemplated with apparent satisfaction in his last Budget speech. If so, the ryots will become coolies and cease to be peasants. Now, as to the object of this Bill. As the law of this country lays down that a man is held to intend whatever are the obvious results of his act, it may be said that the framers of this Tenancy Bill intend by it to get round and upset the Perpetual Settlement, and to add a postscript to Mr. Seymour Keay's article in the Nineteenth Century. With reference to that article, Mr. Cross used most ill-omened words in his last Budget speech. Without adopting the old fallacy of misnaming the land tax rent, he said that the people of India were very lightly taxed, because the revenue of India was derived from the rent of the lands of which the Government had become the owner. This evidently refers to those lands where there is no owner, and from which the Government levies both the land tax and the rent, which ought to belong to some owner. But how has the Government become the owners of these lands? In some cases, such as Polcondra, the Government has become the owner of Rs. 75,000 a year, the property of the zemindar, in addition to 55,000, the annual tax upon that property, by the process of putting the zemindar into a dungeon. In other cases the zemindars may have been got rid of more summarily. No other Government in Asia or in Europe, when confiscating property for real or supposed political offences, ever appropriated the confiscated property to itself; such property was always granted to some other person who would live upon it and spend its produce for the benefit of the neighbourhood. It is feared with good reason that this Bill will deprive all the zemindars of their property by legal processes, and leave the Government as surviving landlord. In Section 41 of Mr. Ilbert's "Objects and reasons" he contemplates the possibility of occupancy-ryots losing what this Bill will make their property, and adds that if such a state of things should ever arise "the Government of the day will know how to deal with it." Is not this mode of legislation, too, like the practice attributed to plumbers of doing faulty work so as to ensure to themselves future employment, or is it to be taken as an intimation that when the occupancy-ryots have lost their land the Government will step in between them and the indigo planters? Not the least of the objections to this Bill is the fact that little opportunity has been given for its discussion in India, and that it was published so late that the petitions against it could only reach Parliament at the far end of the session when there was no time left for calling attention to them in either House of Parliament, and they could only be formally presented. In short, the Tenancy Bill has been smuggled in, and seems likely to pass unobserved under the cloud of dust raised about the Criminal Procedure Bill. It might be asked, are there any Machiavellis who have been subordinate officers of the Government in India? Some people say that the Calcutta head office swarms with them. If so, is it not a Machiavellian proceeding to blind the eyes of the Bengali by putting forward the Ilbert Bill, and at the same time disposing the minds of the Anglo-Indians against their native fellow subjects, and making them indifferent to what passes—making them think of nothing but what is called the Ilbert Bill, when perhaps this Tenancy Bill we are now dis-oussing is the real Ilbert Bill? (Cheers.) In any case it seems most unfortunate that Mr. Ilbert should have been mixed up with Bills either of which is unpopular with one or other sections of the community. (Cheers.)

Mr. C. W. ARATHOON said that the remarks which he had intended to make had been, to some extent, forestalled by the speech of the noble chairman. He knew some native gentlemen who would have been present at the meeting to oppose the Bengal Tenancy Bill, but who had been prevented from coming forward by the sop that they had received in the shape of the Ilbert Bill. On the other hand, he had no doubt that several European gentlemen, who would otherwise have been in favour of the zemindars, had turned against them because the zemindars had taken the part of their native brethren in supporting the Ilbert Bill. Whether the Ilbert Bill passed or not, he did trust that this measure, which had been called by a learned Chief Justice a most revolutionary measure, would be prevented from passing. He submitted that one great evil of this measure would be the blighted faith in the Government. For the future its bonds would not be considered as worth the paper upon which they were written, its promises as made only to be broken. Mr. Justice Stephen, who now adorned the English Bench, had used these words, which were very appropriate: "Whatever else the people of a country may feel about their rulers, they should feel perfect confidence in their good faith and in their scrupulous observance of their promises." Had not the good faith of the English Government been broken by the introduction of this Bill? The Lieutenant Governor (Sir George Campbell) had not carried out the promise which had been repeated by successive Lieutenant Governors that he made to the zemindars when they actually undertook the burden of the Road Cess and Public Works cess collections. That promise was most solemnly made, and the zemindars had been repeatedly told that it would be fulfilled. Instead of that instead of facilities being given for the recovery of rent, the very law of distraint had been virtually abolished. He asked them to consider the words of Rajah Shiva Pershad, addressed to the council, which were very ominous. He said, "If the Bill passes it will shake the faith and confidence of the people not only of British India, but of all the foreign States in the Government to its foundations." A leading paper in India, the Englishman, referring to this Bill, said, "We have no hesitation in saying that the course on which the Government appears to be bent in this matter is one which must prove utterly destructive of that confidence in its good faith, which has hitherto proved one of the surest bulwarks of its power; and that, therefore, whatever its immediate effect on that power may be, its ultimate effect must be in the highest degree prejudicial. If the Government thinks that by thus aggrandising the peasantry of the country at the cost of the aristocracy it is raising up for itself a source of strength that would more than counterbalance its forfeiture of the goodwill of the class it proposes to sacrifice, we can only say that it is leaning upon what the uniform teachings of Indian history show to be a rotten reed. The feeling of allegiance to the great zemindars—many of them representatives of ancient royal houses—is deeply rooted in the hearts of the people of the country, and no attempt at a Foreign Government to eradicate it, by stirring up antagonism between the two classes, would have more than temporary effect. The policy of the Government is the policy of men who are not only willing to sacrifice justice and faith for the sake of an idea, but who are absolutely ignorant of the real feelings of the people they have been called upon to govern." The Indian Mirror, which was known to be certainly not a Conservative journal, said as to the Bill: "Whether the proposed law as it stands does, or does not injure zemindars, it certainly will not be quite satisfactory to the ryots. The consequence will be that while a white mutiny is raging over the Jurisdiction Bill, the Government, by hurried and perfunctory legislation on such an important question as that of rent, may be recklessly provoking a black mutiny." He hoped the time for a black mutiny would never come. He was very glad of that opportunity of bearing testimony to the high qualities of that noble class, the zemindars of Bengal. (Cheers.) Everybody had heard of the munificent gifts of the zemindars. They had heard of the gifts of the Maharajah of Darbhanga, the Nawab Ahasanwolla Khan Bahadur, the Rani Surnamoyi Maharajah of Bardwan, &c., and others. One speaker in the Council had pointed out a number of other zemindars who had given small sums, as they were called, of 50,000 and 60,000 rupees. It was well known that during the famine, zemindars were ever ready with open hands. They had come to the help of the Government by offering their lands for the digging of tanks, and so forth, absolutely refusing to take any money for such land. Then, again, scholarships had been endowed at different colleges by the zemindars. Everybody, for instance, had heard of the munificent gift of a scholarship by the late Honourable Prasanna Kumar Tagore. He called the attention of the meeting to a passage from the prayer of the petition to Parliament of the zemindars of Behar. "Your Petitioners would further respectfully say that they have done nothing to deserve such treatment at the hands of the British Government. They have always been conspicuously loyal to the British Crown. During the time of difficulty at the beginning of the century, and during the more troublous days of 1857 the zemindars of Bengal and Behar placed themselves, their influence, and their wealth, ungrudgingly at the disposal of the Government. But if this wealth and this influence are destroyed, to what class of the community will the Government in future look for support? If the zemindars, whose welfare has always been bound up with the British Government, are sacrificed to visionary theories, what class of the community will be able in future to repose with confidence on what has up to the present day been inviolable, the honour and good faith of the British Government?" The East India Association itself owed its very existence to the zemindars of India, it owed its foundation to gifts made by Indian landholders and Princes. He was glad to be able to take that opportunity of testifying in favour of the zemindars, and it gave him the more pleasure because in doing so he was not speaking against the poor cultivators and tillers of the soil in India, for it was the very essence of his argument—it was the very essence of the opposition, that this Bill would not do a jot of good to the poor cultivators of India. It would place the land in the hands of land-grabbers and money-lenders, and, it may be, of certain small indigo planters, who were always ready to grab at land if possible. The able lecturer had put before the meeting the words of Mr. Ilbert himself. Mr. Ilbert spoke as if he were not sure of the ground he was treading on. On that point he would read an extract from the speech of the Maharajah Sir Jotendra Mohun Tagore Bahadur at the annual meeting of the British Indian Association last year. "The actual cultivators hardly gain much under the present Bill, but it is the jotedars and middlemen who will be most benefited; or, in other words, a class of small landowners is to be raised in the room of the large zemindars." In a speech before the Governor General's Legislative Council, the Maharajah of Darbhanga referred to the subject of occupancy tenures in Behar, and said: "The zemindars as a body are not averse to the cultivators acquiring this right. It gives the ryots a permanent interest in their lands. But the Bill does not create this right in favour of the actual cultivators. On the other hand, it distinctly says that the sub-lessees who, after all, are the actual cultivators of the soil, are not to acquire rights of occupancy. The actual cultivator is not to acquire the right unless he happens to pay in his rent direct to the zemindar, and he is to be perfectly at the mercy of his middleman. This seems to me to be perfectly anomalous, and it would be a better proposal that a ryot who is not an actual cultivator should not be allowed to acquire right of occupancy. Unless some such provision is made, we are bound to create a set of occupancy tenants who are not the actual cultivators, but middlemen; and these middlemen would be in a far better position to oppress the cultivator than the much-abused zemindars." On this point might also be quoted an extract from the minute of Sir Richard Garth, the learned Chief Justice of Bengal, "If the lot of the ryot is a hard one now, it will be a still harder one if Mr. Reynolds's Bill should pass into a law." He was pleased to hear what had fallen from the noble chairman. Lord Stanley had before now been described as the unflinching enemy of injustice—(cheers)—and his remarks to-day had confirmed that view; for if injustice had ever been committed in the British name, it was committed by this Bill. It was patent on the face of the Bill, so that those who ran might read. Was it justice to make a Bill retrospective in its effect upon one class, and not retrospective in its effect upon another class? The provisions as to rights of occupancy are to take effect against landlords, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary which may exist at the time the Bill becomes law, the enhancement clauses not to be retrospective. Was it justice to do away with freedom of contract, and that after recently codifying the law of contract and of specific relief? It would be unjust enough to do away altogether with freedom of contract; but here there was an exception made. The ryot was free to contract, except when he dealt directly with the zemindar. He was treated entirely as an imbecile. Was it justice to give a tenant an occupancy right, over a large portion of land—say 500 bighas, which he had held, it may be, for months only, if the ryot had held a small portion of land, say only one bigha, for twelve years, in the same estate? Was that just again for the Government to exclude itself from the operation of the Bill, as to the mode of realising its rents? Why should not the rights of the Government be subject to this Bill, as much as the rights of the zemindar, if the Bill is a just measure? On what principle should land belonging to a zemindar be subject to one law, and land which is in the hands of the Court of Wards for a minor zemindar, be subject to a different law? It really seemed that it would be wise for the zemindar to fain lunacy, or, if he could, to remain a minor all the days of his life, so as to have his property vested in the Court of Wards. He objected to this Bill, because it did away with the rights of the zemindar, or to choose his own tenant; because the right of pre-emption, which it pretended to confer, was a sham, inasmuch as the zemindar himself could not keep the land he bought, although a stranger could; because the zemindar, instead of being a proprietor, was constituted a mere 1-5th stakeholder, or co-partner in the ownership of his land.

If there had, in the past, existed those causes of complaint against which the Bill was aimed, they had now ceased to exist. There had been a time when landlords as a class might be said to have been oppressive, but so far, at least, as regards Bengal proper, those days had gone by, and since the Indigo disturbance, in the words of the poet, "the hydra-headed monster" had been roused, and the tables been completely turned. He denied the right of the Indian Government as one party to a contract to divest vested rights. He had challenged this in his last address; since then he had read articles in the leading Indian papers expressing the same view in better and clearer language, including the Liberal newspaper, the Indian Statesman; but assuming such right, it could only be exercised in a case of real emergency, which could alone afford any excuse for this Bill. The Honourable Kristo Dao Pal told the Legislative Council that "there had not been the faintest echo from the raiyats in any part of the country to the cry raised by the Government that there should be a general revision of the substantive law;" and that was confirmed by the Chief Justice, who said in his minute that this Bill was "not for the purpose of meeting any actual complaints or rectifying any proved abuses." If any gentleman desired proof that the state of things which was pointed to as giving ground for this measure did not now exist, he need only refer to the more recent administrative reports for the Bengal province to see how the state of the country had improved. In 1793 Mr. James Pattle, before his retirement from the service of the East India Company, gave a striking picture of the uncultivated and desolate state of the country at that time; but in 1853 a writer, whom Sir John Kaye described as one of the ablest men then in India, declared that great improvements had taken place, and said that "it was high time that the outcry about the extreme unhappiness of the Bengal ryot should cease." That was in 1853, and the state of things to-day was infinitely better than then. The Indian Government had not taken pains to ascertain what alteration, if any, of the law, was really demanded. Certainly there was the Bengal Rent Commission appointed, but as one of the native members told the Legislative Council that commission "made no statistical inquiries; they made no local inquiries; they sat in their own chambers; they called for official reports, and from the depth of their own consciousness they evolved their theories and propositions." The Indian Mirror had the following comments upon the laxity of the Government in that respect:—"We must confess to some surprise that, while a commission was sent about every presidency and province of the Empire to ascertain the wishes of the people through representative bodies of gentlemen in regard to a national system of education, no similar course was taken to make the Government thoroughly acquainted with the feelings and the wishes of the two most important classes, whose respective rights and interests on the tenderest point of their nature were proposed to be finally settled in the Bengal Rent Bill. It is true that the official members of the Council are supposed from their position to hold briefs for the ryots, but it is not difficult to understand what is likely to be the result of their advocacy when they will be groping in the dark as to the actual merits of their clients' case." Some provisions of a highly objectionable character had been introduced into the Bill which had not even been recommended by the Rent Commission. Referring to these, the zemindars, in their petition against the Bill, said, "The importation of foreign ideas in the regulation of the ordinary relations of life in an oriental country, for which the people are not ripe, can only lead to harm. Never in this country, or at present within the British territories or in the United States, is the practice of paying compensation to a tenant at will for relinquishment of his holding known or recognised." And lastly, he alluded to the permanent settlement, which, as Lord Stanley had told them, was sanctioned, after due consideration, by men like Pitt and Dundas. By that measure, so solemnly entered into, the Government transferred its proprietary right to the zemindars. The transfer was made for valuable consideration on both sides; (a) The Government was to receive for ever 10-11ths as revenue, and this, whether the land suffered from inundation, drought, or famine. (b) That amount was to be paid in before sunset of a day named, otherwise the zemindar's proprietary right was put up for auction sale. (c) The zemindar had to clear jungle lands. (d) To be staunch supporters of the Government. (e) They could transfer their right and resume lands. (f) Accretions to their property were made additions. (g) Phalkeo Banker and Jalker of their lands belonged to them. (h) They could summon and compel the attendance of their tenants and arrest them if necessary for the realisation of their rents or sell their tenancy. (i) In 1822 they were expressly declared entitled to eject all ryots (except evident hereditary ryots. (j) They were called proprietors, their right was called proprietary right, they were said to have property in the soil, and they were told to exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands "under the certainty that they will enjoy exclusively the fruits of their own good management and industry." The only reservation in favour of the ryots being power to enact laws, whenever proper, "for protection and welfare of dependent talookdars and ryots." He said that in the very valuable paper to which they had just listened were given the opinions of the men of the time, and since that time until Mr. Ilbert came on the scene, as to the rights the zemindars acquired under this solemn compact; the opinions of Lord Cornwallis, Sir John Shore, Sir Erskine Perry, Sir Frederick Halliday, Mr. H. T. Prinsep, Mr. R. D. Mangles, Sir Frederick Currie, of Lord Lyndhurst, Sir Barnes Peacock, and of the present Chief Justice of Bengal. To those, he thought, might be added the names of Mr. Harrington and of Mr. Holt Mackenzie, then secretary to the Government of India, who, on April 22, 1819, wrote as follows:—"But it is the firm determination of Government to maintain inviolate the rights and privileges bestowed on the zemindars by that settlement, notwithstanding any errors or abuses that may now be discovered to have been practised, and although the profits of anyone from his estate should be many lakhs, and his jama only a few rupees, yet Government will on no pretence break its agreement." He had said enough to show that this solemn contract is now being vivisected, that the zemindary system is being utterly destroyed, that there will be in the near future no landed aristocracy left in Bengal to be of use to the British in time of need, that this measure was destroying the aristocracy of Bengal, though only a few years ago the British Government maintained the aristocracy of Oudh. He trusted that before it was too late the voice of England will avert this catastrophe. He would conclude by reading a minute of Lord Cornwallis, dated Feb. 10, 1790, "In case of a foreign invasion, it is of the last importance, considering the means by which we keep possession of this country, that the proprietors of the land should be attached to us from motives of self-interest."

The CHAIRMAN read the following letter received from Mr. C. T. Buckland, late of the Bengal Civil Service, and until recently at the head of the revenue administration of Bengal as Member of the Board of Revenue:—

"I regret that illness prevents me from attending the meeting at St. James's Hall, to-morrow. As a member of the Calcutta Board of Revenue, I have watched the Rent Bill in its several stages, and believe that in its present shape, it is most unjust and injurious to the zemindars of Bengal. I agree with those who hold that if there had been no perpetual settlement in Bengal, the British Government would not now exist in India. I know that the zemindars, as a class, have behaved well to their ryots; and the ryots, generally, bear no ill-will to their zemindars. And I would warn the Government that if they persist in carrying a measure which is calculated to break down the Perpetual Settlement, they will fail to collect the Revenue of Bengal under any system of direct or khas management, without endless oppression and harassment to their ryots."

Mr. W. Taylor, late Commissioner of Patna, also detained by illness, wrote:—"I regard the proposed revolution as fraught with mischief."

Mr. DONALD REID said that the reader of the paper was known to Indians as an eminent literary gentleman, a former Press Commissioner for the Bengal province, and one of "Ali Baba's" C.I.E.'s; and it was difficult to understand what practical knowledge he could bring to bear upon a subject of this kind. It was a common fallacy to suppose that a gentleman could take up a subject connected with agriculture or the land, and master it in the same way that he would the contents of a novel or a book of light literature. It was that utter contempt for the experience and knowledge required in the management of agricultural affairs that had brought about such disastrous results in many of our Indian famines. That day, in the same spirit, an utter stranger to the management of land in India, and to the habits and resources of Indian peasantry, had stood up and delivered a lecture on what he was pleased to call, "The mischief threatened by the Bengal Tenancy Bill," condemning, in a few idle words, the work arrived at, during the course of many years, by four successive Lieutenant Governors and their most experienced district officers. The very audacity of the speaker would be laughable if the question involved were not a most serious one, affecting the welfare of sixty million souls. He trusted that in the name of charity, and for the honour of the British nation, the subject would not be made a party question—(cheers)—in that country, but that Conservatives and Liberals would combine to strengthen the hands of Indian officials in the matter, resting assured that the landlord interest would receive the same attention from the Legislature as that of the ryot. It was a question which could only be settled on its merits by those on the spot who had practical knowledge on the subject. The principal arguments brought forward by the opponents of the Bill were three. Firstly, that the effect of the Bill would be simply to deprive the zemindars of their proprietary rights and render the mere person their estates. Secondly, to make occupancy tenures transferable would injure the landlords without benefiting the cultivators, and the persons who would buy up those occupancy rights would undoubtedly be money-lenders and indigo planters. The mahajans or money-lenders would not cultivate themselves, but would sub-let to an inferior class of ryots who would be mere tenants at will, with no rights of occupancy. The consequence would be that in a few years the settled ryot would have disappeared, and the land would be held by non-cultivating mahajans, and the ryots under them (who would be the real cultivators) would have no rights at all. Thirdly, the provisions as to sub-letting would conduce to bring about the same results. All those arguments could very easily be answered in a satisfactory manner. First, the landlords holding large estates would, as a matter of fact, always be ciphers, and the small landlords would always be engines of oppression on their estates. He challenged anyone to disprove that statement. The twenty-second paragraph of the Indian Famine Commission Report furnished in itself almost complete proof because it showed that the universal custom of the province was for the landlord to make over his rights in the villages of his estate to contractors for short terms of years. He remembered the day when the landlords' rights in the villages of the large British Raj's estates were actually put up to the highest bidder, he himself being one of the bidders. Secondly, in making occupancy rights transferable in the Bill, it was intended to improve a custom which already existed on a large scale in many parts of the province where the cultivators were sturdy enough and energetic enough to assert their rights. It was not intended by Government that those tenures should be bought up as a speculation, as it would be necessary to prohibit the purchaser re-letting them at enhanced rates. Every transaction would be registered, and if a purchaser bought a ryot's occupancy right with the object of re-letting, it would be insisted on that he did so at the old rates, allowing the incoming tenant to enter with occupancy rights. Care would be taken by Government that neither the money lender nor the indigo planter encroached upon the cultivating ryot's rights in that respect. (Hear, hear.) He was himself an indigo planter, and it was his intention, and the intention of every planter of his way of thinking, that the ryot should reap to the full the benefit of every English penny sent into Behar—(cheers)—and they were quite prepared to submit to any change in the law which would prevent them acquiring new land so long as it benefited the ryot. There should be no doubt on that point. (Cheers.) It would be very necessary to insist that the fields of a holding which had been bought or sold up should be let at the old rates, for unless that were done the lands would go by competition at an exorbitant rental. The last census returns showed that there had been a surprising increase in the population of Behar within ten years, amounting to 18½ per cent. in Champaran, 15¼ per cent. in Mozufferpore, and 9½ per cent. in the thickly populated district of Sarun, where the average was 8¼ persons to one square mile. It would, therefore, be little short of criminal for the Government to continue to allow holdings to go at competition rents in those districts. (Hear, hear.) He declared, however, that it had been the custom of the Behar landlord to sell his tenant and the produce of his land to the highest bidder, and to the stranger, and it seemed more than absurd to him, who had been behind the scenes for the last twenty-two years, to hear the landlords bemoaning the fate of their ryots if tenures were made transferable by law. Thirdly, the custom of subletting was a very ancient one, and not nearly so injurious to the people and the country as one would imagine. Certainly, it would be very desirable to check subletting at a rack rent if it were possible to do so, and when there was a correct record of rights that evil might be checked. But as it stood at present, subletting was practised in every village in Bengal and Behar, and surely it was wiser to acknowledge that custom in the new Rent Bill than to entirely ignore it. He asked those who were really interested in the subject of the Bengal Rent Law to get a copy of the report of the Indian Famine Commission (Part 2) and carefully read pages 117 to 121. It would appear from a perusal of those pages that far more drastic measures than those proposed by the framers of the Bengal Tenancy Bill would have met with the approval of the Famine Commission. He was himself a large ticcadar, or contractor of villages, and landholder, and he, therefore, could not possibly dissociate his own interests from those of the Behar zemindars. Any measure which injured them would affect him in the same manner. True, he would have to keep a correct record of rights and so on, which would entail a much heavier outlay in estate management, but he fully recognised the necessity for that. Sir Stuart Bayley had said "the new law will enable the ryot to maintain his rights of occupancy to hold his land subject to fixed conditions of tenure, to be certified exactly of the amount which he will have to pay for it annually, to resist illegal distraint, illegal cesses, and illegal enhancement, to have at hand a trustworthy record of demands and requirements." On the other hand the zemindar would be given the power to realise punctually from the ryot his just rent. The state of affairs at present existing, and which the Government intended to improve, was described in the following words by a zemindar in the Gya District: "The law entitles the Behar ryot to a pottah (lease) and receipts; yet he seldom, if ever, gets any. The law declares the exaction of abwabs (illegal cesses) illegal; yet how numerous and heavy are the abwabs that we, zemindars, exact from him? His mouroossee (occupancy) tenures are altogether exempted by law from liability to enhancement; yet how at each change in, and transfer of, the zemindaree, and how easily when he sets up his head against us, we, without regard to law or justice, add something to it every year? The law protects him against ejection, yet how often, without any opposition from him or without resort to law and procedure, we turn him out of his and his father's land? It is illegal and a criminal offence to extort rent from him by duress; yet our goomastahs and barahils (rent collectors) go and do it at the door of his house, preventing egress and ingress, and deprive him of the use of our village wells until he pays off our rents; and how frequently for the same purpose we bring him to our kutchery (office) and detain him there against his will until he satisfies our demand? The law has guaranteed to the ryot every right in property and every facility to enjoy the fruits of his labour unmolested; yet meekly and quietly he submits to all the indignities and ill treatment to which the zemindar subjects him, and suffers his rights to be thus infringed; and he seldom if ever thinks of going to court for relief; the cause of this being the terrifying influence exercised over him by the bosta (bundle of cooked accounts) of the patwari and goomastah, &c." He (Mr. Reid) could solemnly declare that there was not one word of exaggeration in that statement, which in a few sentences revealed a horrible state of oppression and misery.

Mr. HENRY STEWART REID (late member of the Board of Revenue, North West Provinces) said that he was entitled to speak upon this subject, because for thirteen years, from 1868 to 1881, he had had the supervising of the working of the North West Province Rent Law. He had had to deal with the tenures and with all the rent cases that came up from the permanently settled districts, and, speaking from his experience, during those thirteen years he declared that no man could lay his hand on his heart and say that the Bill now under discussion was not a one-sided and partial Bill. (Hear, hear.) He did not like to use harsh language, but he must say that it seemed to him that the Bill made a "dead set" at the landholder. His sympathies had always been with the tenant, but he was not one of those who approved of the practice of robbing Peter to pay Paul, and that was really the effect of this Bill. There were two features in it which seemed to him especially mischievous. The first was the extension of the area, which was to be held by occupancy tenants, and the second was the transferability of the occupancy right. Mr. Ilbert, in his "Statement of Objects and Reasons," had stated that 30 per cent. of the tenants in chief, the tenants who held under the zemindars, had their tenures with the right of occupancy. There were instances where the zemindar had been unable to get land for his sons and the members of his own family, all the land being taken up by tenants with the right of occupancy. What the act did was to make every tenant at will a tenant with a right of occupancy. A tenant who held under a zemindar for only one year had as much right of occupancy as if he had held for twelve years, the only difference being that he had no right of occupancy to transfer. The question of transferability and the right of occupancy had often been very keenly discussed in the North West Provinces in connection with the Rent Act. The High Court there had ruled that the landlord was eligible to take property. The Board of Revenue, relying on the letter and on the spirit of the Act, contended that the right was heritable, and not transferable. The matter was brought before the Government, and the law was amended so that it could not be misread. In the paper there was quoted the following passage from Mr. Ilbert's "Statement of Objects and Reasons":—"That the powers of transferring which the Bill recognises may in time lead to a state of things in which the great bulk of the actual cultivators would not be occupancy-ryots, but under-ryots with little protection from the law, is indeed within the range of possibility." Mr. Lethbridge referred to that as a "bland remark," and certainly it hardly seemed suited to the gravity of the occasion. He (Mr. Reid) ventured to assert that which Mr. Ilbert regarded as "within the range of possibility" was absolutely certain to happen. (Cheers.) He was certain that the tenant's occupancy right would be improved off the face of the earth, and in the place of the ryot holder there would be money-lenders and land-grabbers. It was well-known that the ryots were often heavily indebted, and also that the money-lenders had a land hunger, and took every opportunity of acquiring land. The money-lender would certainly make a worse landlord than the old zemindar, between whom and the old tenant there were ties very often of family, and who had been associated together for generations. So that, if this Bill passed, the last stage of the ryot would be much worse than the first. He protested that the opponents of the bill ought to be credited with as great sympathy for the ryots as the advocates of the Bill. They did not believe that justice could be done fairly to one party by doing injustice to another party. He trusted that the Bill would never pass, as he believed it would be ruinous both to the landholders and to the occupying tenant. (Cheers.)

Mr. ARTHUR KNATCHBULL CONNELL said it occurred to him that all through this discussion the opponents and the advocates of the Bengal Tenancy Bill had never once fairly joined issue. It seemed to be forgotten what an enormous stretch of country Bengal was. The population of Bengal, according to the last census, was sixty-six millions, and the number of square miles, fifty-four millions; in other words, Bengal was nearly as big as Great Britain, and the population was very nearly double. Supposing a person were to argue that because the peasantry in Guernsey and Jersey were in a prosperous state, therefore the crofters in the North of Scotland were prosperous, such an argument would be scouted; but that was what was being put forward with regard to Bengal. On the one hand, Miss Florence Nightingale quoted evidence to show that the ryots were very much oppressed, and that most monstrous kinds of contracts were forced upon them, and illegal cesses exacted from them; and on the other hand were people who quoted from the Administrative Reports of Bengal to prove that the Bengal ryot was in a perfectly flourishing condition. It seemed to him that the evidence quoted for and the evidence quoted against this Bill really referred to different parts of the country. Eastern Bengal, for instance, was not in the same condition as Behar generally, nor was South Behar the same as North Behar. There was such a total absence of facts in the case put forward both by the opponents and by the advocates of this measure, and it was difficult for an outsider to make out what was really the real state of things; but from all that he could gather, it appeared that in North Behar the character of the people and the agricultural conditions were wholly different to those in South Behar, and still more to those in Bengal proper. He believed he was correct in stating that the population of North Behar was Hindu, or much more Hindu than the population of South Behar, and that the population of North Behar was exactly similar to the population of the districts of Achengur in North Behar. He recently read the Settlement Report (and he believed it was one of the best Settlement Reports) of Achengur in the North West Provinces, and comparing what he found there with what he could learn about North Behar, he came to the conclusion that the population was very similar, and that what had happened in North Behar was that there were not now so many village communities as there were in the North West Provinces, and that those village communities had had their rights and the records of their rights lost, owing to the neglect of the Bengal Government—partly owing to what he must call the monstrous example set by the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards was a sort of Court of Chancery, that looked after the estates of minors, and during the last twenty years it had had various estates under its control. The Bengal Famine did not take place in South Behar, but in North Behar to a very great extent. The Government had itself through the Court of Wards set a most evil example to the zemindars in refusing to recognise occupancy tenures and resorting to illegal distrainments. To a large extent the famine in North Behar was due to the indigo planters. He was glad to hear from the mouth of an indigo planter (Mr. Donald Reid) that he and his friends were quite willing to assent to any measures which would benefit the ryot, but from reading the reports on indigo plantations in places in South Behar and even in North Behar, he did not believe that indigo planting there had been beneficial to the ryot. The indigo planter had induced the zemindar to give him leases which were not advantageous to the ryot, which bound the ryot to grow indigo instead of rice, and which had of course been, as all contracts were, upheld by the Government. That had had a disastrous effect upon that part of India. If it were said that indigo planting took capital into India, and that the natives could not themselves conduct indigo plantations, that was false. In the North West Provinces a great deal of indigo planting had been done by the natives themselves, and they worked it just as successful as Europeans. There seemed to him to be evidence to show that in North Behar there was necessity for a Bengal Rent Act of some nature which should record and protect the rights of the ryots. Not very long ago they were (if they were not now) members of village communities, as they still were in the North West Province, or that part of the North West Provinces which marches with North Behar. Nevertheless, there were great flaws in the Bill now under discussion. It was very doubtful whether the transferability of the occupancy rights was at all sound. Arguing from experience in other parts of India, and assuming that it was necessary for that part of Bengal to have a Rent Act, he still thought that all the advantages of such an Act would be lost entirely if the Government intended to break down the Permanent Settlement, by which this country gave certain pledges to the zemindars. (Hear, hear.) No one who read the Pioneer and the newspapers from the North West and other parts of India could not fail to come to the conclusion that there was a very strong movement indeed in India outside Bengal to try and get that large amount from the Bengal zemindar, which it was imagined had been hitherto entirely lost to the Government. He believed that owing to the number of sub-tenures which now existed in Bengal between the ryots, it would be almost impossible, without inflicting great suffering to increase their taxes. The Government seemed to have its eye—its covetous eye—on every possible source of income, but if it taxed the zemindar, the benefits of the protection intended by this Bill, and which perhaps ought to be given to the North Behar ryots, would be entirely lost.

Mr. CECIL MAURICE CHAPMAN considered that no apology was needed for an Englishman taking part in this discussion, for possessors of property differed in degree and not in kind, and if there were truth in the statement that by the Bengal Tenancy Bill the rights of property were attacked, it affected the holders of all property. No opportunity of protesting against such a measure as this should be lost. Of necessity legislation in India was, as a rule, rather the precursor than the consequence of public opinion; and, in dealing with that measure they were considering not so much the wishes of the ryots themselves as the ideas of certain members of the Legislative Council as to what those wishes ought to be. (Cheers.) If he was right in that, then it might be hoped that any expression of dissent to this Bill would not be made in vain. The fundamental ideas of the Bill were simple and intelligible enough, and of late years people had become familiar enough with them; but there was one reason why those ideas in this particular instance should be most vehemently opposed—because here they were based on absolutely fallacious assumptions. The first and fundamental assumption upon which the Bill was based, was that the cause of all mischief in regard to the land question in India was not the conduct of particular natives, or any particular class of people but the relationship between landlord and tenant. That was an assumption which it had never been attempted to prove, and which he defied any one to prove. The assumption was that all the evils which had been enumerated in the many pamphlets which had been published upon this subject were traceable to that relationship. On reading through the literature of this subject, it would be found that nothing was attacked except the conduct of certain individuals in certain places; but, when legislation was proposed, individual conduct was ignored, and it was the relationship itself that was attacked. Mr. Cobden was the first to make prominent the one idea that all the evil connected with land were due to the relationship between landlord and tenant, and he had said that he would not cease until he had proved it to demonstration in England. The attempt to prove that in England had, so far, failed. It had been urged that it had been proved in Ireland, but he (Mr. Chapman) denied that the recent Irish legislation proved that the land question in Ireland, was still in the experimental stage. It was not yet really known whether the only inducement the Government had for introducing the Irish Land Act, was the mischief which it pretended to remedy. But Ireland was not India, and it seemed to him upon studying this question that all the evidence went to prove that the cause of mischief was the conduct of certain individuals for whose sins a whole class was to be made to suffer. Then there was a second assumption, and that went to the root of the matter, because the advocates of this Bill maintained that upon it the utility and simplicity and the justice of the Bill depended. They assumed that a fair rate of interest and a fixed rate could be made at the same time for a whole province. He contended that if it was attempted to make a fixed rate of interest at once, and a fair one, for an ever-varying species of property, it would be found impossible to do so. That was shown in India by the experience of the last hundred years. There was no one who had attempted to deal with this question in India who had not found it to be an impossibility. If that were so, that was an assumption which was, at any rate, not up to the present proved, and it was only making a leap in the dark to act upon such an assumption. He, therefore, maintained that the apparent justice of this measure was either an impossibility or a sham. Then there was another assumption—as to the effect of this Bill. It was assumed that its consequences would be most beneficial to the ryot, because it would completely change his character. Upon what foundation did that assumption rest? Simply and solely upon the imagination of the framers of the Bill. (Cheers.) Everyone who had read of the character of the Bengal ryot knew that it varied in different parts of the country. It was urged by the supporters of the Bill that, because the ryots in some parts of Bengal had been able to obtain certain rights, therefore those rights should be extended elsewhere; as though that was not really an argument to show that the character of the natives in question was the real gist of the matter, and that, where the ryots had shown the characteristics of independence and manliness, the zemindars were not remiss in allowing customs to grow up which gave them those rights which this Bill intended to force upon the two classes against the wishes of both. (Cheers.) Thus that argument of the supporters of the measure was turned against themselves. Then it was urged that that custom had been conceded. If that were so it was only an argument in favour of the Zemindars. It showed that, where the Zemindars had found that the ryot was a person who could be benefited by the custom, they had voluntarily conceded the custom. It had been urged again that, even granting that some risks were run by the Bill, still, it was only an experiment and a useful experiment. He would only say and the testimony of history confirmed it, that experiments in politics were the frequent source of revolutions. (Cheers.) It had been denied that the consequences of the Bill would be such as we have described, viz., to place the ryot at the mercy of the money-lenders. Upon that question he would quote the words of Mr. Charles Russell upon similar proceedings in Ireland: "the Banks"—(which might be taken to represent the money-lenders in the case of India)—"seem soon to have appreciated the fact that the law had given the tenant a property which, whatever it might have been in equity, was not legally his before . . . When the loss upon the interest transaction and the renewal transaction together with the expenditure in eating and drinking which the obliged borrower is bound to make, are taken into account, it will be seen how speedily a debt so contracted runs up, and upon what unfavourable terms the loan is contracted. If the danger had been proved to exist in Ireland, surely it was an obvious danger in India, where the new law would interfere with the custom of centuries. As to the injustice of this measure, he was convinced of it by the very arguments of those who supported the Bill. On reading the literature upon the subject, it would be found that the arguments and the excuses put forward were contradictory. The approvers of the Bill had obviously exaggerated both the wealth and wickedness of the zemindars. They said, "We cannot give you compensation in this matter because we deprive you of nothing," and almost in the same breath they said, "We are bound to deprive you of those rights that you have now over the ryot, because you have exercised them so badly." One or other of those two reasons must be untrue. It was unnecessary to do more than refer to Mr. Lethbridge's paper, in which were given the exact words of the Permanent Settlement, and the official reports which followed upon it, to prove that the first excuse was untrue, and to show that something had been taken away, even if it had not been acquired by prescription. In regard to the second excuse, the evidence was quite against the assumption that the zemindars, as a class, had acted unjustly to the ryots. In conclusion, he would describe this measure, as it had been described by a previous speaker (Mr. Stewart Reid), as a measure which was obviously an attack upon a single class, and as such to be deprecated. It was also an impossible attempt to prevent a growing class from the results of its own improvidence. Such evils could only yield to time and to education; but it was attempted here to make a certain class more moral and more careful of its own interests by Act of Parliament, which had ever proved to be an impossibility. It seemed to him, if he might use the simile, that the Government, in passing this measure, was rather like a shepherd, who, having discovered that a single dog had taken to worrying the sheep it ought to protect, determined to have nothing more to do with dogs, forgetful that in doing so, he was leaving his flock to the wolves. (Hear, hear.) He believed that if the Bill was passed in its present form—even with compensation—it could not be otherwise than a dangerous and unjustifiable experiment; but if it passed without compensation, it would undoubtedly and obviously inflict great and severe injustice. (Cheers.)

Mr. KRISHNALAL DATTA said he regretted that something like party spirit should have been shown in the opposition to this Bill. He had as much sympathy for the zemindars as any one, but what was needed was justice for the toiling millions of his fellow-countrymen. He supported the Tenancy Bill, because he believed it would conduce to the material welfare of the thousands of natives now living, and millions yet unborn.

Mr. W. MARTIN WOOD also supported the Bill, but admitted that before passing into law it should be subjected to important modifications.

Mr. DA COSTA remarked that the Bill was, and would be, the outcome of a Liberal policy, but that could not be so, because it violated the most cherished of Liberal principles. A Liberal policy upheld justice, but this Bill would involve grievous and undeserved wrong on a class whose unswerving loyalty and valuable services, especially at critical times, such as the Mutiny of 1857, and the more recent scarcity in Behar, had been repeatedly acknowledged by the Government of India. A Liberal policy professed to be based upon honesty, but this Bill proposed that the Government, which had sold the land with its proprietary rights solemnly proclaimed, should dispossess the purchaser of such rights without refunding the price received for them. A Liberal policy was said to rest on truth and good faith. Were truth and good faith to be looked for in the statement now made, that the zemindars were not the proprietors of their estates when the British Government had for a whole century repeatedly and solemnly declared the contrary, and their declarations had throughout been sanctioned by the Legislature and upheld by the Law Courts? Was it to be believed that those solemn declarations and their confirmation by the highest authority in the land were all false? Were truth and good faith to be found in the specious arguments ingeniously set forth by a lawyer who was unknown to fame until he was chosen to be the mouthpiece of those who contrived this iniquitous measure? The Bill had been represented as forming an essential part of Lord Ripon's Indian policy. As a matter of fact, however, the Bill had been initiated long before Lord Ripon had any direct connection with India, and at a time when his lordship entertained probably no thought whatever of being appointed to rule over that country. The Bill professed to improve the position of the ryot or cultivating tenant, and that policy had gained for it the support of a very large class in this country. But that plea was entirely delusive. The inevitable result of the Bill must be to deprive the cultivator of the security he now enjoyed against an undue enhancement of his rent, and to leave him without any special protection from the law to the mercy of the middlemen whom the Bill proposed to create, and who were under the Bill to become the future landlords of the cultivators. Party feeling might have obscured for some the real issues of the measure, but it was to be hoped that independent men would carefully examine the clauses of this extraordinary Bill before deciding to give it the weight of their sanction. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. A. ARATHOON, after paying a tribute of respect to the exceedingly able and exhaustive paper of Mr. Lethbridge, said there was one view which he would like to put before the association, because it seemed to have escaped notice, and in some measure acted as an apology for the conduct of Mr. Ilbert and Lord Ripon with regard to this Bill; at the same time it was a view which inclined him to oppose this Bill from considerations purely of political economy. The main provisions of the Bill which would revolutionise the conditions at present existing with regard to land tenancy in India were: Firstly, the destruction of freedom of contract; secondly, the giving of occupancy rights to the ryot; and, thirdly, the giving of those occupancy rights in cases even where the ryot happened to possess only a small portion of land and the giving of it over exaggerated and enlarged tenures. Those were the provisions which inclined him to think that that which the Legislature had in view in proposing this Bill was the improvement of the tenant peasantry. The idea prevailed in political circles pretty nearly all over Europe now that the best way in which land could be held for the advancement of any country was by peasants who were at the same time tenants—in other words, what was called tenant-peasantry. It seemed to him that that was a condition which, though it might possibly answer in certain parts of the Continent, although it might possibly answer even in Ireland, was one which would not answer at all in India under the present circumstances. The reason why he thought that that was what the Government of India were trying to bring about by this Bill was that in order to bring about any such condition, freedom of contract must first be destroyed to a certain extent. It must be put out of the power of the tenant to be able to contract himself out of his right of occupancy. That proviso was contained in this Act. Then the ryots must have given him a certain right of occupancy, and that was done by the Bill. Not only was the right of occupancy given; but it was given in the most stringent manner possible to the tenant. Therefore, he argued that it was the intention of the Legislature probably in this case to create in India a tenant peasantry. The reason why he thought that the creation of a tenant peasantry such as that contemplated and intended by the Legislature would be injurious to India, was that in the first place its creation would be injurious at any rate at present. Then he opposed it because he thought that this Act would not fulfil the object in view, because if it were wished to create a tenant peasantry the occupancy right must be made inalienable. The right given to the ryot by this Bill was not an inalienable right. The ryot could alienate it to anybody but to the landlord. He considered the condition of the peasantry in India to be such that as long as the ryot was given a right which he could alienate the conditions of his existence were so precarious that he would be sure, sooner or later, to alienate it. Therefore this Bill would not create that which it had in view, it would not create a tenant peasantry at all, it would merely rob the landlords of a right which he now possessed. It gave a certain right to the tenant and merely enabled him with greater facility to dispose of the right to a third person who there was every reason to believe would not hold that right to the advantage of India to the same extent as if that right had been possessed by the tenant or, in the absence of the tenant, by the zemindar. Had the occupancy right thus given to the tenant by this Bill been made inalienable in all circumstances, that is to say, had it been made personally to the tenant who acquired that right, and in the event of his being obliged to sell his tenancy had that right been, so to speak, forfeited altogether, then it would have been said that a substantial attempt had been made on the part of the Legislature to create a tenant peasantry, because the result would have been that the ryot would have felt from his occupation that he was not a mere tiller of the soil, that he had an interest in the soil. At the same time the people surrounding the ryot would not be tempted to get hold of the occupancy right, because they could not have with it all the incidents and all the advantages of the possession, but would merely be put in the position in which the ryot was now, namely, that of a tiller of the soil. It further seemed to him that it was a very moot point indeed, it was admitted to be a moot point in political economy, whether a tenant peasantry was best for any country. Admittedly, it could only be beneficial in a country in which the tenantry were in a more or less civilised and enlightened condition. Those who had studied this question knew that if the land was to pass from landed proprietors into the hands of small tenant peasantry, that tenant peasantry must be in position, financially and intellectually, to exercise that power to the best advantage in the cultivation of the soil.

Mr. ROGER LETHBRIDGE, replying very briefly on the whole debate, observed that the remarkable weakness of the case put forward by the few speakers who had supported the Bill, really left nothing to be replied to by those who opposed it. He concluded by moving a vote of thanks to the noble chairman for his able and impartial guidance of the debate.

The motion was seconded by Mr. ARATHOON, and carried by acclamation.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

[“DAILY CHRONICLE.”]

MR. ROPER LETHBRIDGE'S paper which was read yesterday before a large gathering of the East India Association places the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Bill in a very strong light. That gentleman's lengthened experience of India, and the exceptional opportunities which he has had of making himself acquainted with the questions at issue, would of themselves entitle him to a respectful hearing, even if the arguments he uses against Mr. Ilbert's measure were less forcible than they are. Mr. Lethbridge very properly draws attention to the importance of the province referred to, which, being almost exclusively an agricultural one, will be greatly affected by such a Bill becoming law. Bengal has a population equal to those of France and England put together, and the extent of territory is indicated by Mr. Lethbridge in the statement that it is “nearly as large as the German Empire.” We do not propose on this occasion to follow Mr. Lethbridge through all the arguments which he uses with a view to prove that the proposed measure is fraught with the gravest evils, and that it has been formulated “in defiance of the most solemn pledges of the British Government.” It will be sufficient for the present if we say that his case, as he presented it yesterday, is calculated to give rise to serious reflections as to whether Mr. Ilbert's mode of amending the existing laws affecting landlord and tenant is not open to many objections. Mr. Lethbridge declares that the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Bill are far more arbitrary in a certain direction than those of the Irish Land Acts. Without discussing the point, we may say that Mr. Lethbridge has summarised them as amounting to an intention to introduce fixity of tenure, fair rent, free sale, compensation for disturbance, abolition of power of contract, and, in fact, the solid programme of the most “advanced school” into a country which differs “as widely from Ireland in every political and economical aspect” as it is possible to imagine. He declares emphatically that this Bill, if it should become law, will confer important rights upon a newly-created class of middlemen, and not upon the actual cultivators of the soil. Against the middlemen the cultivators will possess “no rights whatever, not even those rights which they now possess against the zemindars.”

[“WESTERN MORNING NEWS”].

THE Bengal Tenancy Bill is another of Mr. Ilbert's Bills. It gives the farmers of Bengal the three F's, and reduces the zemindar or landlord to a rent-charger. It is in defiance of what is called the permanent settlement, and it gives the ryot or peasant a right to sell his interest in his land as indefeasible as the landlord's own. Mr. Roper Lethbridge, the late Press Commissioner in India, read a very able and exhaustive paper against this Bill. He attacked it on all grounds, as a breach of faith, as a visionary scheme, as an interference with freedom of contract, as being likely to ruin the aristocracy, as being certain to increase the power of the usurers, and to lead to such evils as afflict the cultivators in the Deccan, as regulating rents by means of a revenue officer, and binding the landlord down to receive no more than a fifth of the estimated annual value of the land in staple crops at harvest time prices. Mr. Roper Lethbridge believes that the new law will mean ruinous litigation, for every Hindu is litigious; that it will hinder cultivation; that it will put the middleman in the place of the landlord as the ruler of the tenant; that in the end it will abolish the landlord altogether; and that the final result will be ruinous for both landlord and tenant. For the tenants will sub-let under the money-lender, and the land will be cursed. If we appeal to Ireland, Mr. Lethbridge replies that India is not Ireland. If you speak of starving ryots, he says their case is worse under the system of the Deccan which the Bill proposes to introduce. And the Government is getting rid of the class which has been most loyal to it, for the sake of doing this questionable thing. Such are Mr. Lethbridge's arguments against the second Ilbert Bill. I can only say that they were not controverted at the meeting.

THE “MANCHESTER COURIER” ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THAT the ryots are poor in the extreme, everybody who took an interest in the subject has known perfectly well for a long time past. The source of their distress is, however, as notoriously not so much the oppression of the zemindar as the harshness of the personage who is known in Ireland as the “Gombeen man.” The landlord neither in Ireland nor in India has the faintest desire to oppress or unjustly grind down the class which comes between himself and the soil. He fully recognises that as a matter of fact there is in each case a species of partnership between them, and that it is the duty of both to make reasonable concessions, and for the tenant to behave with at least common honesty. Unhappily the necessities of the ryot, like the extravagance of the Irish tenant, have not unfrequently brought him within the reach of the money-lender, who makes advances upon crops ungrown—sometimes even unshown—and takes as his share that which is really the landlord's property. The results are the same both in Ireland and in India. There is a considerable amount of what is called agricultural distress, and in the end a Liberal Government, with its accustomed a priori reasoning, brings in a Bill to compensate the unfortunate tenants at the expense of their hardly less unfortunate landlords.

THE ILBERT BILL.—THE REASONS AGAINST IT

TO THE EDITOR OF THE “SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.”

SIR,—Having, I hope, placed the reader in a position to fairly consider the subject, I proceed to give some of the reasons against the Bill. The Europeans oppose it because it seeks to deprive them of a right which they have possessed during many centuries. I hope it is not needful to again refute the calumny that they are seeking aggressive privileges. Mr. J. D. Mayne (late “Attorney General” of Madras) speaks of the right as a privilege. I prefer the term right as being more comprehensive. A right is an advantage which has sanction in law; a privilege may or may not have that sanction. Mr. Mayne says “This is a privilege the roots of which must be sought in the foundations of the English Constitution. It is a privilege which has been asserted and maintained by every Christian nation in their dealings throughout the East, and this is a privilege which has been asserted and confirmed within recent years, not merely by the Indian Legislature but by the British Parliament. Upwards of six centuries and a half have passed since the barons extorted from King John the Magna Charta, which was itself a declaration of the English common law, and one of the rights which they insisted upon for themselves and their plebeian subjects was this, that every man should be judged by the decision of his own peers, and in pursuance of that, and up to the present day, the commoner is tried by the commoner, and the peer is tried by the peer. If Lord Ripon were to return to England and be guilty of a felony, Lord Ripon would not be tried by the Lord Chief Justice of England and a jury, but by the Lord High Steward of England and the assembled peerage of Great Britain in their “ermine and their robes.” As regards India, which is under our own government, Europeans, or at least Englishmen, consider that this right is still theirs; and they have reason to do so. They do not, as has been falsely represented, seek to be tried by a different law from the natives. They are both tried by the same law, and the Englishman only seeks to retain his right to be tried by his peers, which the Bill would take from him, and is the only object of the Bill. He does not seek, as has also been falsely represented, to try all natives. The latter are tried in most cases by their own countrymen. As regards the right in the case, the Judges in the High Court say:—“The position in which European British subjects would be placed by the proposed changes is one which they have never occupied, and in which the Legislature has on several occasions deliberately determined that it would not be wise to place them.” This the judges further illustrate by showing that though the subject was considered so recently as 1872, the right was left untouched and therefore practically re-confirmed. Where, then, is the aggression which Mr. Gladstone denounced? It is entirely on the other side, an aggression on the right of an Englishman to be tried by his peers.

Another reason against the Bill is that, not only does it deprive Englishmen of the above right, but it disqualifies many of them from being justices of the peace. This fact has been challenged; but, perhaps, the following may be deemed as authoritative as any surmises in a different direction. The judges of the High Court say:—“At present the Government can appoint such European British subjects as it thinks fit to be justices of the peace. This power has been hitherto extensively employed, and Europeans other than covenanted civilians dispose, in a manner which the judges believe to be satisfactory, of cases in which Europeans are concerned. There are many such justices of the peace in Bengal, whose appointments would have been impossible in the amended section.”

Another reason against the Bill is pointed out by the judges. They say that “the proposed change will confer a jurisdiction unknown to English law, a combination of inquisitorial, magisterial, and judicial powers, which may be justified by the necessities of the case of India, but which Englishmen in India may with reason contend, should continue to be exercised as at present, only by officials for whose competence or character they have some adequate guarantee.”

The above is a serious consideration. Under the Code any magistrate may act upon a complaint made, a police report, upon information from any person other than a police officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion. On a mere suspicion, or on a hint from anyone, the magistrate may set the police in motion, and thus he becomes as it were the prosecutor, and orders the police what to do. Then, with his mind filled with suspicion, he becomes investigator, magistrate, and judicial officer. Does not this look an admirable arrangement from an English point of view? And knowing, as Englishmen in India do, the liability they incur of having false charges instituted against them, can we wonder that they should protest against a change which removes almost the only protection they have against such charges? But several well-meaning people tell me that if I saw the hard swearing that takes place in the English courts, I should come to the conclusion that we were not in a position to reproach the Hindoos. With all deference I submit that there is nothing common in the two cases, except, perhaps, the swearing. But do these gentlemen mean to maintain that serious false charges are made and carried out systematically in England as they are in India? Do men deliberately fabricate charges of murder and anything short of it as mere matters of spite in England? There may be instances even of this; but they are not common, and would be far more easily dealt with than they are in India. Take what is known as the Stephens case. A planter in Assam, perhaps 800 miles from Calcutta, was charged with having murdered a coolie on a plantation. Witnesses swore that they saw the man beaten to death by Stephens, that they saw him dragged into a jungle and buried, that they told the police, and the police dug up the bones and they were produced in court. For the defence a professor of anatomy was called, who proved that the bones were a miscellaneous collection that could not possibly have belonged to one subject. Of course, the man was acquitted, but he was ruined by the prosecution. Another case occurred near Calcutta, where a man was charged with murder, and the case was got up only too well. So bent was the prosecution on proving the case that two native witnesses each produced a skull, and both swore that the skulls produced belonged to the murdered man! Are we to be told that the loud swearing that takes place in English courts in cases that have mostly some foundation in fact are on a par with such as these? Englishmen who are liable to be in common with natives, not unreasonably demur to a change in the law that would deprive them of a right to be tried by officers who understand them, and in whom they have confidence. And, in connection with this matter, it may be as well to state that the Government require from every officer an account of the work he does.

There is, therefore, naturally a desire to show a good record both as to the number of cases tried and the per-centage of convictions. Surely there is danger here of a possible desire to show that officers have been attentive and diligent, as those qualities may lead to promotion.

I think I have previously dealt with the question of anomaly and privilege. I have also shown that Englishmen in India are not seeking to abolish the privileges which the natives enjoy. Here is one, for instance. It is held by respectable natives a great degradation to have to appear in courts of law in any capacity. Many are excused from attendance as a matter of privilege. A native lady cannot be summoned as a witness in a case. If her evidence is required, a commission is sent to her house, and she, or some one for her, answers from behind a curtain the questions put to her. There is nothing to be gathered from the demeanour of the witness, which is often more valuable than the words. Cross-examination, as we understand it, is out of the question. But if the evidence of an English lady is required, she is compelled to attend court, amid the riff-raff that is usually attendant on all courts, and the more unsavoury the occasion, perhaps the more imperative it is that she must attend. For instance, there has just been heard a case of defamation in the High Court in which some of the evidence was not fit for publication, and yet a number of English ladies had to attend as witnesses, one part of the evidence being so questionable that the judge ordered all ladies out of the Court, even the plaintiff herself. There were no native ladies called, though there might have been some light thrown on the subject if they had been examined. Knowing that it is held to be discreditable to appear in a court, the natives, even common servants, will bring actions for wages or charges of assault, and if they cannot gain anything by summoning their employers, they will subpoena his wife and daughter as witnesses for the purpose of putting upon them and him the indignity, as they deem it, of appearing in court. Now, if in a case of this kind Baboo Kushipatter should be summoned, and his wife and daughters were required to give evidence, Sreemuttee Kushipatter and her daughter could not be compelled to attend court. But if Mr. Gladstone were summoned, and his wife and daughters had to give evidence, he would feel the indignity that was put upon them, and there would be a fine outburst of Midlothian fire. In this supposititious case I have merely changed the colour of the parties in question. But why should there be this invidious distinction, seeing that Baboo Kushipatter is only a Bengalee form of Mr. Gladstone's name? Here is a privilege possessed by natives that is really invidious against Europeans. It enables them, according to their ideas, to put upon any European with impunity one of the greatest indignities possible. Yet Lord Ripon and Mr. Gladstone do not propose to remove this anomaly. Nor do the "dominant and aggressive Europeans" ask for its removal. They feel that it is a privilege that the natives highly value; and they also know that to demand that Lord Ripon should be consistent and remove this, would be a grievance to the natives and would embarrass the Government. They do not seek to abolish this privilege, and the great foe to anomalies himself dare not tackle this. Why, then, should he so obstinately adhere to the position he has taken with reference to this wretched Ilbert Bill, which is not required in the interests of the natives, but which deprives the Europeans of a needful safeguard and a valued right? And is it not conceivable that John Pointsman or Henry Dawspring should feel the indignity and shame put on his wife and daughters even in as great a degree as Mr. Bright or Mr. Gladstone himself, should they be subject to the same indignities personally or through their families? But neither of those gentlemen is in danger of such indignity, so it does not matter much about such fellows as Pointsman and Springbuffer; they are only "working men" though they may be engaged in pioneering the civilisation and development that has done, and is doing, much for the welfare of the "teeming millions of India."

Ru land Park, Nov. 5.

JAMES WILSON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH."

SIR,—In previous letters I have given the alleged reasons in support of the Ilbert Bill. In the present one I propose to give some of the reasons against it. But before doing so, there are two observations that I wish to make to candid readers who are willing to understand the subject; to those who only wish to dogmatise in their own ignorance it is probably useless to offer either observations or reasons. First, I would notice that many of the supporters of the Bill assume and impute that those who oppose the Bill are antagonistic to native interests; that they are self-seeking only, and are mostly concerned to seek privileges for themselves, and to oppress the "teeming millions" of India. Such statements are utterly false, and are a gross libel upon the greater portion of the opponents of the Bill. Both Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright have assumed that the measure is one to prevent the domination and aggressiveness of Europeans. To this I can only repeat that there is no intention on the part of the opponents to claim anything in the way of a privilege that has not been enjoyed by their countrymen for many centuries as a right. They seek nothing in the Bill or by the Bill; they simply oppose it because it seeks to deprive them of a right.

The second observation I wish to make is this, that many of the supporters of the Bill, with the best intentions, for which I give them credit, fall into the serious error of arguing Indian questions from a purely English point of view, and from English analogies. To attempt to arrive at the truth by this method is about as hopeless as it would be to try to eclipse the sun with an umbrella. I do not presume upon special knowledge, but I do not hesitate to say that no one who has not had some experience of Oriental life, however much he may have read or studied, can fully comprehend Oriental subjects. Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright may be great authorities on questions that they understand; but they are very blind guides on Indian affairs. Mr. Gladstone pettishly denounced English aggression in connection with the Ilbert Bill. I have given the Bill in these letters, and I challenge anyone, from Mr. Gladstone downwards, to show within the four corners of the Bill that the Europeans are seeking any privilege whatever, or any right, that has not been theirs by law for generations. Now, that is a simple issue. If the statement is not a fact it can be easily disproved. The reason why I wish to guard the reader from arguing from English analogies is this, that in almost everything the East is as opposite to the West as are the poles asunder. And if anyone will or can only argue the question involved from the English point of view, let him, when he has arrived at a conclusion, put in a negative, and the probability is that in four cases out of five he will then be much nearer the truth. The whole genius of Oriental nations is conservative—it will be understood that I use these terms in the philosophical not in the party sense—while the western nations are all for change and advancement. The ideas of the two are essentially opposed, their manners and customs, their habits, their institutions, their modes of thought, their religion and life altogether are different from ours. An Englishman on entering a house takes off his hat, an Oriental keeps his on, and puts off his shoes. A native woman—that is, one of a respectable class—is not allowed to show her face, and anyone who does so is regarded as only a common woman in not the best sense of that term; and there are many natives who consider European ladies (or women if the term be preferred), on account of their appearing in public with their faces uncovered, as, in the language of Burns, "just nae better than they should be." Of course, the few natives who have been to England, or who have been admitted to English society in India, know otherwise. Western ladies are not averse to showing their faces, but are less free in displaying other portions of the body, while native ladies, if they can only conceal their faces, seem to consider that the rest is not of great consequence. Much in the same spirit, while Europeans dance, the Hindoos never do; and they can scarcely understand how it is possible for ladies and gentlemen to dance and be respectable. The presumptuously ignorant know all. Who argues, or rather dogmatizes, from English analogies cannot see why the natives should hold such views. The fact is that nothing is more common than for the natives to give dances; but in Bengal, they do their dancing as they would their fighting—by proxy. They never dance themselves, but they hire dancing girls to dance before them; and it is a matter of notoriety that these professionals do not confine their profession to dancing. The consequence is that the natives arguing from analogy as some of the wise supporters of the Bill do, look upon English ladies who dance in the light in which they view their own dancing girls. Of course, this is highly complimentary to our countrymen and countrywomen in India, and shows how well the natives understand our motives and character, and how well they are fitted to sit in judgment upon the Europeans in India. But let us step a little lower in the social grade. We shall find our order of things entirely reversed. If we require servants—and of course we do—they are mostly men. The "housemaid" is a man, the "chambermaid" is a man, the cook is a man, the "washer-woman" is of the masculine gender, and the nurse for your little boy is of the same order of being. But what of the women? Oh, they do not exactly carry the hod like Paddy, but they do his work. They climb lofty scaffolding, with basket loads of bricks or pancheons of mortar on their heads, they carry at earthworks in the same way, just as our "navvies" would work on a railway or a canal. Need I go further in the way of illustrating the essential difference between the East and the West? Yes, I will just give one more. I was trying to impress upon a respected and influential townsman the fatuity of the course adopted by the Government and their supporters as regards this Bill. I said the spirit of the people is essentially conservative; they are the most easy to govern of any people on earth; the only thing they desire is to be let alone, as they always say, "What we have is what our fathers had. They were wiser than we are, and what suited them is good enough for us." They deprecate changes, and we will not let them alone. Now here comes another illustration of the danger of arguing from English analogies. The gentleman replied, with what he doubtless felt a self-satisfied air of triumph, "Ah, you see, we let things alone in Ireland, and have brought things almost to a state of revolution, and we shall do the same in India." He evidently assumed that because Paddy required a change, the Hindoo did. The country was quiet and content until Lord Ripon threw it into agitation about this wretched Bill, which, for any possible good that could accrue to the "teeming millions," is about as contemptible a measure as ever emanated from any legislative assembly, and which cannot now be truly defended by any reason that will hold water; but which must be passed to the enormous detriment of India for generations to come. It is because it is this, and no more, that I oppose the Bill; and I have yet to meet the first man who has ever regarded me as otherwise than as a real friend of the "teeming millions of India." It is on this account that now I decline to follow even great names through the mire of party to support which alone this wretched Bill is to be thrust upon India. To either party in England as a party India has no cause to feel specially grateful. They have both used and betrayed her in turn, and she might well exclaim, "A plague on both your houses." Yet I have scarcely a doubt that the gentleman to whom I have referred will still adhere to his opinion, and support the party in power, though I maintain that with the experience we have had in Ireland, the worst possible policy for England is to create another and a greater Ireland in the East, which is the direct and, it is to be feared, the inevitable tendency of the policy of Lord Ripon, who must be supported in the interests of party in the House of Commons. The Eastern Ireland will not be a more happy country than the Western one; but what is either of them in comparison to a "good" party triumph in the House of Commons? The present race of statesmen—countries are governed by sovereigns and statesmen—will enjoy their victory perhaps, but they will leave an undesirable legacy to their successors. But that will not much matter. Did not a distinguished statesman over the Channel find comfort in the phrase Après nous le déluge?

Sheffield, Oct. 29, 1883.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay Oct. 26; Madras and Allahabad, Oct. 24; Calcutta Oct. 23.

THE "regrettable violence" of the Anglo-Indian community, in its protests against the Ilbert Bill, gets worse and worse. The Englishmen of the Chittagong district have met; and, like the planters of Behar, and those of Cachar, and of Assam generally, and of Darjeeling, and in fact of every other part of India, they have passed some undeniably "regrettable" resolutions. Further, they have ended by singing the National Anthem "with enthusiasm," and by giving three cheers for the Queen.

Now, as we survey all these violent and enthusiastic proceedings from the excellent vantage-ground of a London arm-chair, we must confess they lack that serenity which characterises the true philosopher.

To speak quite seriously of the growing exasperation of the English non-official community in India—for we do most assuredly regard the matter as one of the most serious import—to say that we deplore that exasperation, and the violent language which it is producing, is utterly inadequately to express the alarm with which we read the published reports and telegrams from day to day and from week to week. And further, we will add this, that it is quite possible that this excessive exasperation does weaken the hands of those members of Lord Ripon's Government, who would fain undo the past year's miserable work. For it is by this time tolerably evident that Lord Ripon himself is absolutely reckless of consequences in his determination not to sacrifice his own wretched vanity; so that we may guess, with considerable certainty of being right, that the great desire of General Wilson, Sir Steuart Bayley, Mr. Hope, and the Commander in Chief, is to smooth the ruffled feathers of the great man, in the faint hope of inducing him to listen to reason.

But having said so much, we can go no further in condemnation of this deplorable violence. The Government of India ought to have foreseen it, as a certainty, from the very first. Nearly every officer of experience in Bengal has foretold it, from the very first. That it will go on, from bad to worse, until the Bill is withdrawn or repealed, is the one thing that must be evident to every intelligent being who is acquainted with the history of the English nation, whether at home, in America, or in the Colonies. Will Sir Steuart Bayley, or anyone of Lord Ripon's advisers, say that worse would not have already happened in Melbourne, or Sydney, or Montreal, under the same conditions? Here there is a numerous, brave, and self-reliant community of Englishmen, absolutely unanimous in defending a privilege which they passionately feel is an inalienable right, without which their liberties will not be secure. They have exhausted every argument in self-defence; they have torn to shreds in fair controversy every miserable argument of the sentimental sophistry that seeks, as they believe, to imperil their dearest rights for a mere idea. They are supported in their contention, not merely by the declamations of excited orators, but by such arguments, absolutely crushing in their calm, judicial logic, as those of Mr. Justice Stephen, Mr. Rivers, Thompson, and many others. They are virtually answered, except by the foolish talk of sentimental doctrinaires, and by the non prole, sic jubeo of Lord Ripon. They are driven like rats into a corner. Doubtless their despair will hurt themselves more than it will hurt their persecutor. Even if it be carried no further than words—and pray Heaven it may not lead them further!—it must injure their cause; and it is the part of every true well-wisher to do all he can to mitigate that despair. But we say, with the most earnest, the most solemn conviction, that the load of guilt that lies on those who have joined in this wicked hunt, and who have supported and encouraged Lord Ripon in this shameful persecution, is a heavy one indeed.

THE Indian Daily News has the following paragraph on the Cachar meeting:—

"The whole European non-official community of Cachar have held a mass meeting at Silchar on the subject of the Ilbert Bill, and out of a total of 193 residents, only four were actually unrepresented. Several officials were also present. Numerous speeches were made, and resolutions passed, and though there is little to add in the way of argument to what has been already said and written, the sentiments expressed were certainly resolute enough. The delay in withdrawing the measure has had the unmistakable effect of making the opposition more bitter, instead of milder, as some writers who prided themselves on belonging to those who had 'cooler heads' than the rest prophesied would be the case. It is a curious fact that while these cool heads are unable to see anything of importance in the Bill at all, the educated natives, to whom the concession is being made, have never ceased to attach the utmost importance to the principle of the Bill, and are even willing to accept the smallest concession as long as that principle is not lost sight of."

The vigour with which the work of preparing for the Calcutta Exhibition is being pushed on is highly creditable to the Government of Bengal. Notwithstanding the adverse circumstances, we believe that the administrative ability employed on the task will make the Exhibition a success. Its prospects are like those of Sir Steuart Bayley's future lieutenant-governorship in one thing—had it not been for the Ilbert Bill, its magnificent success was already assured on its own merits; whilst in spite of the Ilbert Bill, we sincerely hope it may yet "pull through."

The subject of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, and of the gratuitous introduction of "Irish legislation" into Bengal by Lord Ripon, is rapidly forcing itself on public attention in England. Unhappily, in this, as in regard to other portions of the present Viceroy's policy, those who disapprove of it, when they happen to be Liberals, seem to think it to be sufficient if they express their disapproval strongly in private.

THE large meetings addressed by Mr. F. T. Atkins, the delegate of the working-men of India, during the past week, have in every case passed resolutions strongly condemning the Ilbert Bill. The meeting on Friday night at Newport, Monmouth, was a splendid success—there were more than 2,000 persons present, many being Liberals, and the resolution was carried unanimously and amid much enthusiasm.

At West Hartlepool, where Mr. Atkins spoke last Wednesday, not only was a resolution carried condemning the Ilbert Bill, but a further resolution called on the Liberal member for the borough, Mr. Richardson, to oppose the measure in Parliament. There were five dissentient voices only.

THE north country papers, we observe, lay most stress on Mr. Atkins's meeting at Darlington, where a vast gathering came together last Tuesday, and condemned the Bill almost unanimously—only four hands being held up against the condemnatory resolution.

On Saturday, Mr. Atkins was at Bristol; and on Monday he carried his resolutions triumphantly in the Westminster Working Men's Association.

It is hardly complimentary to Mr. Grant Duff and the members of his Government that the Madras Debating Society has lately affirmed, by a large majority, the proposition that "The backward condition of the Madras Presidency is due to a long succession of inert and incapable Governments."

THE Gazette of India contains the opinions of various officials and others in Bengal on the pending Bengal Tenancy Bill, together with a minute by the Lieutenant Governor. The papers disclose a great conflict of opinion, but the majority of them condemn the Bill more or less strongly. The Lieutenant Governor approves of the principle of the Bill, but would modify many of its details. Most of the opinions are against a table of rent-rates; and many are in addition against the conferring of power on the ryot to transfer his occupancy right. The general report by Government is promised to issue shortly.

It has been decided that the Select Committee on the Bill shall assemble in Calcutta on the 21st of this month, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal presiding. The following members will be present, viz., the Honourables Sir Stuart Bayley, C. P. Ilbert, W. W. Hunter, H. J. Reynolds, J. W. Quinton, T. Gibbon, and G. H. P. Evans, the Maharajah of Durbhunga, and the Hon. Kristodas Pal. Presumably Sir Auckland Colvin will be added to the number.

A NEW Calcutta magazine, with the title of the Indian Review, has been started under the editorship of two gentlemen, whose names are a sufficient guarantee for the success of the venture, Professors Rowe and Webb. The first number is ended by a history of the month, in nineteen pages, the last five of which treat of Indian subjects. This summary, as it is not signed, is, we presume, editorial. Discussing the Ilbert Bill, the writers say:—

"It is abundantly clear that the European population will be satisfied with nothing less than its total withdrawal, and that the passing of the Bill in any form which recognises its principle, however it may restrict its operation, will leave the passionate animosities which have been aroused, unallayed and in full force."

THEREUPON—as was to be expected under the present régime—has arisen a pother. This is what the Times of India says about it:—

"The editors of the new Indian review Cream, are stated to be two officers of the Bengal Educational Service. These gentlemen, the Indian Daily News states, have received an intimation from Government that should an article opposing the Ilbert Bill appear in the columns of the periodical, they must be prepared to forfeit their appointments. We can scarcely credit the statement, as on the face of it, it is absurd to think that the Government, which has given to the world in the opinions of its own officers the most damaging array of authorities against the Bill, should stoop to the petty expedient of gagging a publication which has yet to see the light. Since writing the above we have seen a letter in a later edition of the Indian Daily News from Mr. W. H. Targett, the manager of the publication, stating that so far as he was aware the matter had never been before Government at all, and no article that it was ever intended should appear in the review had been withdrawn." In an editorial note dealing with Mr. Targett's letter, the Indian Daily News says:—"What we said yesterday amounted to this: that the gentlemen who had undertaken to edit Cream, in connection with an article against the Ilbert Bill, had been told practically they could not remain editors of the magazine and retain their places in the Educational Establishment of the province. We go a step further to-day, and say, that the matter is at present before the Government of India; and we say distinctly, such a question, for the credit of the Government, ought not to have been raised at this juncture, and that whoever has raised it has done the Government a serious disservice."

The Englishman says:—"The question whether the Act which conferred criminal jurisdiction over European British subjects on native magistrates in the presidency towns was not ultra vires of the Legislature, is one which the highest court can alone decide, and the legal bearings of which could not be profitably discussed in our columns. But however this question might be decided, it is certain that, should the Ilbert Bill be passed, the Government, by setting at nought the pledge under which the Act of 1872 was enacted, will liberate the European British community in the presidency towns from all moral obligation to recognise its validity, and it will become matter for the serious consideration of the community what action they should adopt to mark their sense of the fraud that has been perpetrated upon them. We are strongly of opinion that the passing of the Ilbert Bill, or of any Bill extending the criminal jurisdiction of natives over European British subjects, should be the signal for every European British subject in the country, wherever resident, to claim the right of trial by his peers, and the sooner it is understood that this will be done, the better."

The Pioneer stated a few days since that the notification recently published in the Gazette of India regarding the Viceroy's arrival in Calcutta was only a preliminary announcement, and that a supplementary notification would be issued in which the Volunteers would be called upon to furnish a guard of honour. The Englishman, however, denies the accuracy of the statement, and avers that no invitation has been issued to the Volunteers to form the customary guard of honour. "It would obviously be both impolitic and undignified," remarks our contemporary, "for the Viceroy to issue such an invitation. Nor is there any ground for the suggestion that the late notification in the Gazette regarding the ceremony to be observed on the arrival of the Viceroy was premature. It was issued in the usual course." The Indian Daily News also thinks that the notification was issued in the usual course, and that it was intended as a snub for the Volunteers. "The fact is," says the Daily News, "the Volunteers have been asked, and the notification from the office of the Military Secretary was published after it was pretty well known that if any Volunteers did turn out, the numbers would be so few as to amount to a mistake. . . . Considering that even captains of companies have been asked whether the men would turn out, that programme was simply an insult to the whole body of Volunteers at the Presidency. Whether it was meant to be so or not matters very little, though the semi-official paper was prompt enough to give it application and point. But, as we have said, the publication of the programme relieves the Volunteers from an invidious position, and settles the question of their turning out by informing them in the most discourteous way that they are not wanted. We do not see how there can now be any question about the matter. It must be accepted that the Volunteers will not turn out, since they could not do so without a forfeiture of self-respect, or without their motives and their conduct being altogether misunderstood."

We take from Messrs. J. Thomas and Co.'s circular the following Report on Indigo prospects:—

"As regards the Crop Estimate published in our issue of 25th ultimo, we have no change to report, and we think it will be found tolerably correct. Some 400 or 500 chests of Oudes have arrived, and about 180 chests found buyers at prices ruling from Rs. 10 to Rs. 15 per maund above last season's opening rates for fine descriptions. Gads and common Oudes are not much inquired for. Owing to the severe drought, October sowings in Bengal are not progressing satisfactorily, and, except at some factories that suffered from inundation, the bulk of the Behar concerns are very short of moisture for next year's operations."

MESSRS. W. MORAN and Co. give the following Report on the Calcutta Tea Market for the week ending Oct. 23:—

"On the 27th September 12,589 chests were offered and 12,202 sold. There was good competition, and prices generally were firm, occasionally showing a slight rise. Medium to good Pekoes which have been plentiful, did not meet with as much demand as other classes, Pekoe Souchongs, and Broken Teas maintained full value. On the 3rd instant 18,413 chests were offered, and 17,060 sold. The large quantity offered seriously affected prices, and there was a fall of about one anna per pound on all except Broken Teas and Pekoe Souchongs. The market was closed from the 6th to 17th instant, but sales will be resumed on Wednesday the 24th instant, for which date about 16,000 chests are catalogued."

We take the following obituary for the week, ending Oct. 26, from the Times of India:—

"Brevet Colonel Mark H. Heathcote, C.B., commandant 14th Bengal Lancers; Baboo Hem Chander Ker, late deputy magistrate of Alipore; Mr. Henry Marten, C.I.E., late examiner P. W. Accounts, N. W. P. and Oudh."

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following is the official summary of the reports of the Agricultural Department on the state of the weather and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending Nov. 6:—

"Rain continues to fall generally in the Madras Presidency and Mysore, and the condition of the unirrigated crops has much improved. Excessive rain has slightly injured the crops in the Nasseik and Ahmednuggur districts in the Bombay Presidency; but more rain is wanted for rice in some of the southern districts. The river maintains a low level in Sind where the weather is unusually warm. There has been no rain in Guzerat, but, excepting rice, which has failed in parts, the crops there continue to do well. Heavy rain has caused slight damage to the kharif in Hyderabad, but the crops there and in the Berars are generally good. There has been little rain in Central India and Rajputana, but the weather is seasonable and prospects fair. In Burmah and Assam the rainfall has been general and favourable, and the rice promises well. In Bengal the fall continues light and partial, and, except in the north and east, the latter rice crops on high lands have suffered considerably from the break, which is now beginning to affect the crops on the low lands as well. Rain is also needed in parts of the Central Provinces for rice, but prospects are generally favourable. Clear weather has prevailed during the week over the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, and the Punjab, where rain is much wanted for rabi sowings. Harvesting of kharif crops continues in Southern India, and has been nearly completed in the northern provinces. Rabi operations are also in general progress, except in Bengal, the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, and the Punjab, where they are delayed for want of rain. Prices are rising in Bengal, fluctuating in the Punjab, and generally stationary elsewhere. The public health continues fair."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated Nov. 11.

"The Anglo-Indian community in the Chittagong district held a meeting last Monday for the purpose of protesting against the Ilbert Bill, at which resolutions were passed regretting the persistency with which the Government was forcing on that unpopular measure, and thanking the press and the Indian officials for their advocacy of the rights of Europeans. The meeting expressed a unanimous opinion that it will be the duty of all Anglo-Indians, in the event of the Bill being forced upon them, to ignore the right of native magistrates to try them, and pledged itself to support the Defence Association in any course which it might see fit to adopt. Finally, the National Anthem was sung with enthusiasm, and three cheers given for the Queen.

"The Commissioner of the Presidency division, in an administrative report for 1882-83, makes the following remarks regarding the state of public feeling:—

"During the year public feeling, or what represents it here, has been excited by more than one subject. The three most interesting topics to which attention has been directed are local self-government, criminal jurisdiction, and the Bengal Tenancy Bill. With reference to the first two, there has been much agitation, confined, however, to the educated classes of pleaders, whose minds are filled with ambitious aspirations which they mistake for patriotism. The great mass of the people and most of the zemindars have held aloof from sharing in either movement, and many who held decided views on both subjects would have expressed them had they not been deterred by the fear of being held up to public scorn by unscrupulous writers in the native press. On the question of the Tenancy Bill, the zemindars, whose interests are vitally affected, have been much more active in displaying their interest; but the great mass of the people remain apathetic in this matter as usual. Instances have come into notice which the zemindars have been making persistent efforts to extinguish in anticipation the new law and all the existing rights of the tenants by pressing on them new leases of the contents of which they have been apparently ignorant.

"Throughout Lower Bengal the rains have now apparently ceased, and cold weather is setting in. The crops promise well in the Chittagong, Dacca, and Orissa divisions, but in the Presidency, Burdwan, Rajshahye, Chota-Nagpore, Bhagulpore, and Behar divisions there has been little rain since the middle of September, and a very small out-turn is expected. Prices are steadily rising in most districts. Fortunately there appear to be considerable stocks in hand from the past year.

"For some weeks past the Calcutta share market has been in a very depressed condition, especially as regards the jute-spinning companies, and as yet it shows few, if any, signs of recovery. Over-speculation and the high price of jute are generally assigned as the causes of this state of things. A number of speculators and investors have suffered heavy losses, it being estimated that the full value of their shares of all kinds aggregates £1,250,000.

"The work in connection with the Calcutta Exhibition has been pushed on rapidly. The buildings are nearly completed, and many of the exhibits are already in position. It is probable that everything will be ready by the opening day. The camp hotel, constructed by the Government on the Maidan for the accommodation of the officials and persons connected with the exhibition, is now finished. It is situated near the cathedral, and consists of eight or ten rows of one-storied wooden buildings. The furniture and all the arrangements have been designed in camp fashion; and although the accommodation is not luxurious, the place appears to be fairly comfortable. The Behar Mounted Rifles, who are expected to arrive here about Christmas, will also be encamped on the Maidan.

"The Lieutenant Governor arrived in Calcutta yesterday, after having on Thursday last installed the young Maharaja of Cooh-Bebar, who now takes over the administration after a minority of nearly twenty years, during which the State has been administered by British officers. The Maharaja is described as a most promising youth. He has been carefully educated by English tutors, has visited England, and during the last few years has lived chiefly at Calcutta, where he has mixed freely in European society and is very popular.

"The Viceroy and his party are still in Cashmere. So far there does not appear to have been any justification for the fears expressed by certain newspapers that the Viceregal progress, by necessitating the withdrawal from their fields of a large number of labourers, would cause heavy loss to the people.

"Preparations are being made at Bombay to receive the Duke of Connaught, but the ceremony is not likely to be of a very imposing nature. The chairman of the Calcutta Corporation is also taking steps to prepare for the reception of the Royal party on their arrival in the capital.

"Sir Robert Sandeman's expedition to South Western Beloochistan will start on the 15th inst. Two engineer officers accompany the party for surveying purposes. Their observations, coupled with those of Major Holditch, in the course of his expedition to Takhi Suleiman, and those of the exploring party which is about to be sent up the Gomul Pass as far as the junction of the Zhob Stream with the Gomul River, should result in a considerable accession of knowledge of the geography of the country on the other side of the frontier."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

A PRAKRIT GRAMMAR.

"Prākṛita-Vyākaranam. A Prākṛit Grammar, with English Translation." By Pandit Rishi Kesh, Sāstrī. Lahore: Lalla Mehrohand, 1883.

THE object of this book is to supply readers of Sanskrit dramas with a manual, arranged on modern principles, of the Prākṛit dialects. The author justly observes that the works of ancient Indian writers are arranged in an immethodical and repulsive manner, and are burdened with numerous superfluous rules applicable to solitary words. The Pandit has done a good deal to simplify the intricate subject; and by the simple device of collecting special exceptions into alphabetical lists he saves much of the learner's time and presents the words in the best form for ready reference. In the lists of indeclinable words we should have preferred the exact Sanskrit equivalents of the Prākṛit words, instead of the descriptive rendering supplied; thus, for navivaiparitye we should have preferred navi=na+api, and so on. Rishi Kesh's sections on Declension and Conjugation are much fuller than those given in Professor Cowell's edition of the Prākṛita-Prakāśa; and his section on the Changes which Bases undergo on Inflection, is very useful. Altogether his book may fairly claim to be a tolerably perfect Prākṛit grammar; and it reflects much credit on him as a scholar and as a man of independent thought. No one after seeing this excellent book will be content with the meagre pamphlets hitherto in use.

IN THE COMPANY'S SERVICE.*

THE number of books containing narratives of some of the events of the Indian Mutiny is considerable; and of most of them it may be stated that they are not only fiction to the greatest extent to which fiction can be stretched, but are often written by people who have never been in India, and have taken little trouble to ascertain what really might form probable occurrences. From such volumes this book differs widely. Although the author is too modest to place his name on the title page, it is most evidently written by one who knows thoroughly the subject of which he is writing, and has been himself a close spectator, if not an actor, in the dreadful scenes of the outbreak of the Mutiny. The opening scenes lie in Addiscombe, the great school of Indian heroes, and the fortunes of three young men who were comrades there is sketched out in the volume through which they play their part in love and war. The scenes at Addiscombe are undoubtedly personal reminiscences and are in many cases very amusing. When the scene shifts to India, the life of a youngster, in former days, first at a Presidency town and then at a small up-country station is narrated in a very life-like manner. The reception of the first news of the outbreak and the symptoms at the time among the natives are well told. It is rather amusing to read of a battery of artillery which seems to wander about the country alone at its own sweet will, firing rounds of blank cartridge in the jungle for diversion

(p. 310) and without any aid from other arms of the service fights pitched battles with large forces and decisively defeats them. But if the author here rather hazardingly approaches the style of the of the Mutiny that is so appreciated by very young ladies, his description of the defence of the little fort, the effect of danger on the different characters, and how it brings out unexpected qualities, are given with skill and spirit exactly as events are likely to have occurred. To all connected with India this book will be found very interesting, and those who have not been in India would gain much trustworthy information in an entertaining form as to the life in the time of old John Company.

"ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE."

In the November number of this review a new departure is taken. It commences with a novel entitled "Man Proposes," by Mrs. A. Phillips, which, from the opening chapters, promises to be both interesting and exciting. Colonel Malletson's valuable accounts of the "Battlefields of Germany" are continued, the present number containing the narration of the battle of Nordlingen. An article entitled, "Soldiers or lawyers?" by Ignotus, whose clever essays in the Saturday Review are well known, has plenty of good-natured sarcasm, very amusing and at the same time true and full of common sense. Lieutenant Chawner's account of "What I saw in the French Manoeuvres," gives one a useful insight into some of the minor details of the French Army. An article on the "Police in the North Western Provinces of India," by a District Superintendent, has a great deal of valuable information, not generally known on this subject, put in an interesting form. The magazine concludes with an article on "Our Field Artillery," by Lieut.-Colonel Charles Ford, who points out that we can at present only equip for active service the artillery for one army corps in an efficient form, and endeavours to "arrive at an organisation which should be convenient and practical during peace, and should work without alteration or fiction on the outbreak of war." Englishmen have never yet succeeded in doing this in any one department, with the exception perhaps of the old infantry regiment prior to reform, so suggestions from one who knows the subject thoroughly and practically will be found very valuable.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WOMEN OF ENGLAND AND THE ILBERT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to express in your columns for a proposal I wish to make to the women of England on behalf of their sisters in India? My proposal is this:—"That a committee should be formed of the most influential of the women interested in the burning question of the day—"The Indian Criminal Procedure Act Amendment Bill"—and that a petition should be by them properly drawn up against the Bill in the form of a memorial to Her Majesty the Queen, soliciting her earnest consideration and personal influence, as Empress of India, in the matter. That this petition should set forth as simply and concisely as possible for the enlightenment of those ignorant on the subject, the position in which the passing of what is briefly known as the Ilbert Bill will place English women in India, with the evil results to them personally which must accrue from it; that this petition, when drawn up, should be circulated throughout England for the signatures of women of all classes—working-men's wives in particular, for it is a question greatly affecting the working English community of India; then those who take an intelligent interest in the well-being of their sisters abroad, will have it in their power to strengthen the hands of their countrywomen by unity of purpose." "One and all" should be the motto of English women of all degrees in both countries."

England has done much for native women; she has sent them out Zenana missionaries, who have been the means of bringing light into their darkened dwellings; she has sent them out medical women, so as not to neglect their bodily while earning for their souls. Can she, while having the interest of India's women so deeply at heart, set on one side the claims of her own countrywomen, and allow a Bill to become law, which will and must degrade English women in native eyes?

Under the Ilbert Bill, English women will be liable to be tried on criminal charges before native judges, while native women remain exempted from appearing in court; in the case of the latter such publicity would be thought, by natives, an entirely infamous thing. Such being so, is it possible that native magistrates, brought up under a social system of the rigid exclusion of native women, can be qualified, however great may be their abilities and moral worth, to judge English women brought before them, when their very appearance in court at all must create a bias against them, in the native mind, to start with? That the measure has, merely in its stages of discussion, done much mischief, in lowering the dignity and position of English women in native eyes, few will dispute; none can do so if they read the Indian papers, the cases of assault by low-caste natives on English women being unhappily decidedly on the increase. I am being to a considerable extent connected with India constantly receiving letters giving accounts of the marked increase of insolence on the part of the lower-class natives towards English ladies. The following is an extract from a letter received not long since from an officer's wife, and dated from Murree:—"This country is in a very unsatisfactory state; whatever you write against the Ilbert Bill will not be too strong. Of course, at first it would only be the thin end of the wedge, but general opinion is that natives throughout India are becoming most insolent. In days gone by an English woman was perfectly safe anywhere; it is very different now as can be seen by the repeated assaults on ladies in Calcutta. We hear people say it is scarcely safe to live alone." I might make extracts from various other letters, but do not wish to trespass too much on your space.

For women the Bill need not become a party question, as there is too great a tendency to make it; let them set the political aspect to one side and assume entirely on one side, and take up their position against it merely on the grounds of the proper interest which should be shown by the women of England in the welfare of their fellow-countrywomen in India. This in itself should produce a unanimity of feeling which, brought under the immediate notice of Her Majesty, who has, we all know, the real interest of her subjects deeply at heart, should help considerably towards the end aimed at—the withdrawal of the Ilbert Bill altogether, or its very decided modification with regard to its effect on British subjects.

There will be every opportunity afforded to women in the large industrial centres to make themselves acquainted with the manner in which the measure will bear on English women on our Eastern Empire, as Mr. F. T. Atkins, the delegate of the working men and their wives, sent by them from India, is holding meetings in the principal towns in this country in order to plainly set before the working men of England the true state of public feeling on the subject in India, and to call on them for their aid in assisting to prevent the Bill from becoming law. My proposal to the women of England, crude as it is in its present state, if taken up might have good results; that is if it is put into the working form of a memorial and circulated for signature throughout the land.—I am, sir, yours faithfully,

A. G. F. ELIOT-JAMES.

FREE TRADE WITH INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The Prince of Wales, in his speech at the closing ceremony of the Fisheries Exhibition, has intimated that in 1886 there is to be an exhibition of the industrial arts of Her Majesty's Indian and Colonial possessions. His Royal Highness expressed a hope that he would have "the co-operation of our fellow subjects, the people of India, and that an important section of that exhibition would be representative of the art industries of that Empire." Anxious as Indian manufacturers will doubtless be to avail themselves of such an opportunity, it must be remembered that the prevailing law relating to articles of silver or gold, or articles the ornamentation of which depends upon the precious metals, is prohibitory, nothing being permitted to be exposed for sale, composed wholly or in part, of either metal, without it being previously hall-marked at a British assay office.

At the present time, there is a duty of 17s. per ounce in the case of gold, 1s. 6d. per ounce in the case of silver, payable upon all goods imported into the United Kingdom. This is a serious hindrance to the co-operation of native workmen, but, I trust, it will be remembered that, even after the duty has been paid, no article can be offered for sale unless this "protectionist" law has been complied with—a matter of sheer impossibility in the case of ninety-nine hundredths of Indian productions.

The Government have made several attempts to abolish the duties upon gold and silver plate, and, in all probability, next session of Parliament will see the last of these fiscal hindrances to trade in the precious metals, but it is essential that hall-marking should be made a "voluntary" instead of a "compulsory" institution, if India is to have fair play in 1886, to be any idle to suppose that Indian manufacturers will be desirous to send their goods 12,000 miles, with the sole prospect of having them sent back unsold, because not legally permitted to be sold, at the expiration of the exhibition.

All persons, therefore, interested in India should unite in a strong representation to the Government of India, to demand freedom of trade in gold and silver plate as between the mother country and Her Majesty's Indian and Colonial possessions.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

EDWARD J. WATFERTON,

Chairman of the Goldsmiths' and Silversmiths' Free Trade Association.

Fall-mall East, London.

FROM ASSAM TO BURMA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I wish to convince the Indian Government and the English public that they need not be afraid of the Nagas, a large highland tribe in Upper Assam. If we follow the example of General Wade in the highlands of Scotland we shall find that the Nagas may be converted into very useful and peaceable subjects.

The Chief Engineer of Assam Railways has been to Simla (see page 368 of the Alkhabad Pioneer Mail of the 17th ultimo). His survey of the North Cachar Hills has proved unexpectedly favourable. We may hope to have a railway from Commillah (200 miles east by north of Calcutta) to Driburgak in a few years. One of the most important stations on this railway will be at Sebsaugor, and it is from the latter place that Government is expected to construct a broad branch road into Burma.

Why does Government hesitate? The expense need not be heavy. I do not at present ask for a railway; I do not ask Government to pierce mountains with tunnels, or make expensive railway bridges, but I ask for a General Wade high road. If the Romans had occupied India they would have made this road fifty years sooner.

Government hesitates to make it because it is afraid of the Nagas. Now let us ask, who are the Nagas? All reports, official and private, concur in proving that the Nagas are a contemptible foe, and that one thousand of our sepoys are sufficient to keep the whole tribe in very good order.

Let us consider first the Eastern Nagas. The murder of Lieutenant Holcombe, in 1875, at Niam, appears to have given many people a most erroneous idea of the prowess of these murderers. Captain Badgley, who was present, and who survived, recorded that the Nagas were afraid of one rifle (our people had no other rifles at hand) and delayed the attack until they could get hold of that one awful weapon.

"Sitting in my tent I heard one of the herdsmen say to Lieutenant Holcombe, 'The Rajah (village headman) is there, but is afraid of the gun.' Lieutenant Holcombe took the rifle from the sentry and gave it to the Naga, who then began to laugh and dance with the rifle on his left shoulder, while he flashed his diac in his right hand."

Page 4, of Part 3 of "Captain Abbott's Notes," Lieutenant Holcombe's murder was speedily avenged, and the only difficulties which our force experienced were in bridging rivers and in avoiding the heavy rains. Had there been a proper road bridges would have been found ready constructed, and the daily rain would not have caused so much damage. Savages avoid wide straight roads, knowing that their spears and war-axes will not protect them from bullets.

But it will be said that although the Eastern Nagas are contemptible, the Angami Nagas, north-east of Cachar, are a terrible set of savages.

The meaning of the word Angami is "unconquered," but these warriors had very quickly to submit to us. Their hostility necessitated the campaign in 1880. Mr. Dama's ill-fated expedition to Konoma, in 1879, was conducted in the face of every warning. But on the 13th of the following February Captain Abbott, with three other English officers, and 150 sepoys, marched for Paplongmai, where the stores and families of the Nagas had been deposited. On the 9th of March he occupied Paplongmoi, and the Konoma men, finding their source of provisions, arms and ammunition cut off, surrendered.

—Your obedient servant,

Nov. 12.

In Rowney's "Wild Tribes of India," published last year, by De la Rue, pages 167 to 175, you will find an interesting account of the Nagas. Rowney thinks that the bellicose disposition of the race is likely to be mastered by tea planting. "The Nagas are carrying on a most profitable business with the tea gardens, and those so engaged have already been partially humanised, at the same time that their occupation has forced them to neglect their internal bickerings."

"They understand the advantages of trading, and frequently come down to the markets of Assam and Cachar, heavily laden with ivory, wax, and cloths manufactured from the nettle fibre, in exchange for which they receive salt, brassware, and shells, and by preference, matchlocks and gunpowder, if they can get them."

"The Nagas have no kind of internal government, and acknowledge no supreme authority."

They are, therefore, much more easily coerced than savages who have clever chiefs to guide them in war. They are timid assailants, though resolute behind breastworks.

MAIL NEWS.

H. E. the Viceroy and party left Sialkote early on Friday morning, Oct. 19, and by nine o'clock reached Jummoo, where they were received by the Maharajah of Cashmere and the local chiefs. On the following evening His Excellency was entertained at a state banquet by the Maharajah.

The Hon. J. Gibbs, Member of the Viceroy's Executive Council, arrived in Bombay by the mail steamer Venetia on Wednesday night, Oct. 24. Mr. Macfarlane, M.P., was a passenger by the same steamer.

Lady Baring left Bombay on Oct. 26, on her way to Egypt, by the P. & O. s.s. Rosetta.

Sir Donald Stewart and his staff left Simla on the 19th October.

Sir Donald Stewart will omit from the programme of his tour his proposed stay at Jubbulpore, in order, by arriving two days earlier in Calcutta, to meet the Duke of Connaught during his short stay there.

General Hardinge, Commander in Chief of the Bombay Army, left Poona on Monday, Oct. 29, for a short tour, during which he was to visit the stations of Nussurabad, Mhow, and Malegoan, arriving in Bombay on the 14th November. His Excellency is accompanied by the Quartermaster General and Military Secretary.

A meeting of leading European and native citizens of Bombay was held on Oct. 25, for the purpose of arranging for a fitting reception of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught.

Arrangements were being made for giving their Royal Highnesses a loyal reception at Aden on their way out.

Mr. Wilfrid Hunt was expected at Colombo the week before the mail left Bombay, and Arabi Effendi was preparing for his reception.

Sir Alfred Lyall, Lieutenant Governor of the North West Provinces, proposes to make a tour in Oudh during November.

His lordship the Bishop of Bombay and Mr. Mylne left Bombay for London by this mail.

His Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad is to be informed by the Viceroy during his approaching visit to Calcutta of the date on which he will be formally invested with full powers as head of the Hyderabad State.

A report from Kabul says that the Amir Abdul Rahman has sent a mission to the Khan of Bokhara.

Mr. Dalgleish, the Central Asian traveller and merchant, has left India for Yarkand with a large quantity of merchandise.

Mr. Magnus Mowat has been appointed President of the Bombay Committee of the Calcutta International Exhibition, in succession to Mr. Thorburn, resigned. Mr. Gordon, the honorary secretary, withdrew his resignation.

Mr. J. H. Grant, collector of Bombay, has been appointed by Government, "Special Commissioner for Bombay," in connection with the Exhibition.

Space has been reserved in the Exhibition buildings for exhibits sent by the Bombay mills, and arrangements are being made for the representation of the local cotton and silk industries.

Considerable damage to the crops had been caused by heavy rain.

In Berar so much damage was done to the cotton crop that only ten or eleven annas yield is now expected.

The heavy rain caused a flood in the Tapti, and Surat was slightly inundated, but no damage was done.

The amount of rain registered in Bombay during this monsoon has been 98 in.

The members of Parliament who propose to visit the Madras Presidency during the approaching cold weather are to be invited to an entertainment by the Triplicane Literary Society, in the name of the native public of Madras.

The net amount of sea and land customs revenue, excluding salt revenue, for the first six months of the current financial year, has been Rs. 52,56,000, as compared with Rs. 56,21,000 during the corresponding period of last year.

The prices of admission to the Calcutta Exhibition, on five out of the six days of the week, have been fixed at the low rate of four annas for the day, and eight annas for the night.

The Chiefs and Princes going to Calcutta for the Exhibition will not be regarded as guests of the Government of India. That is to say, instead of being billeted upon Government, they will have to pay their expenses themselves.

Only one death from cholera occurred in Bombay City during the week before the departure of the mail, as compared with an average of four for the corresponding weeks in the last five years.

The late Barsee head-shroff of the Bank of Bombay, Homajee Byramjee Bana, has been committed by Mr. Cooper, Chief Presidency Magistrate for trial at the Sessions on a charge of embezzling Rs. 64,037, the moneys of the bank.

The Marine Court, appointed to inquire into the loss, near Basra, on August 16, of the s.s. Airey, has suspended the master's (Captain Platt's) certificate for three months.

His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the N.W.P. left Naini Tal for Lucknow on Wednesday, the 17th instant.

Major J. C. Ross, B. E. and Mr. W. Willcock, of the Irrigation Department in these Provinces, have been offered, and have accepted, appointments under Colonel Moncrieff, B.E., in the Public Works Department in Egypt. They wait formal orders and leave India almost immediately.

The resignation of his seat in Council by the Hon. D. G. Barkley is notified in the Gazette.

Captain E. T. Ross, 10th Hussars, returns to India this month, and takes up his post as Aide-de-Camp to Sir Alfred Lyall, displacing Mr. C. R. Burn, 8th Hussars, who has been officiating for him. Mr. Burn, we understand, will then join the Viceroy's staff as extra Aide-de-Camp.

Mr. A. L. Cappel, Director General of Telegraphs, make a long tour between Oct. 13, when he leaves Simla, and Dec. 14, when he proposes arriving in Calcutta, visiting in the meantime the Punjab, Rajputana, Central India, the stations on the West Coast, and Madras.

Major G. P. L. Marshall, R.E., of the irrigation branch of the P.W.D., proceeds home on furlough immediately. Mr. B. Buckley, C.E., of the Bengal irrigation department, officiating for him.

Mr. Cordery, the resident, has returned to Hyderabad.

Lieutenant Colonel Griffiths, 3rd Sikhs, and Lieutenant Colonel Lance, 2nd Punjab Cavalry, will represent the Punjab Frontier Force at the Bangalore Camp of Exercise.

Mr. F. B. Hogg, the Director General of the Post Office, arrived in Calcutta on Nov. 1.

The Chamber of Commerce in Bombay have sent a strong letter to the G.I.P. Railway in the matter of the high charges for conveying grain, and again urging the Company to reduce their rates.

Mr. A. B. Pattison, on his return from leave in England, arrived in Allahabad on Saturday, Oct. 20, and took over charge as collector from Mr. T. Benson.

Colonel Minto Elliot, B.A., now at home, will succeed Col. Hughes as Deputy Adjutant General of Artillery, when the latter officer takes up the post of Inspector General of Ordnance about the close of the year.

His Excellency the Governor of Madras returned to Ootacamund on Oct. 22, after completing his tour of the western coast.

Lieut. J. H. Bor, R.M.A., the locust exterminator, has been granted permission to return to Cyprus by the mail-steamer of Nov. 9.

The completion of the Assam and Behar Railway by filling up the breaks between Sonpore and Dinagepore has been sanctioned by the Secretary of State.

The Lahore paper expresses an opinion that the matter of the Persian Mission to Cabul will lead to awkward complications. The Shah is bound by treaty to abstain from diplomatic intercourse with Afghanistan, save with the assent of England. The Ameer, on the other hand, was informed on his accession, that we should insist on his holding no intercourse whatever with any Foreign Power, without our full cognisance. The Shah, however, has certainly not explained to the British Government the objects of the mission which he has sent, and it will be difficult to decide whether the account which the Ameer gives of the affair is altogether straightforward.

A Special Commission is to be appointed to inquire into the working of the out-still system in Bengal.

The winter promises to set in early at Simla this year. Very cold weather has already been experienced there.

but the men of that day felt they could not in honour go back from the great constitutional position they had taken up, and the result was that no tax was ever again levied in England without the consent of the Commons. Neither could it have been pleasant for the Colonists who threw the tea into Boston Harbour rather than allow a duty to be levied on it, as in both cases they felt they were breaking the law imposed upon them by Government, which, as loyal citizens, they were bound under ordinary circumstances to obey. But these acts have been justified at the bar of history, and although Charles lost his crown, and George lost America, the cause of constitutional freedom was established and extended wherever the English language was spoken throughout the world. These men, sir, of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, are adjudged to have acted rightly against tyrannical encroachment on their property merely, but to-day it is our liberty which is at stake, and which we are called upon to defend. We are born with certain constitutional privileges, which we have inherited from our forefathers, which no Government can claim to take from us except for the gravest reasons of State, but which we ought, if possible, to hand down intact to those who may come after us; and among those birthrights, none has been higher prized or more jealously guarded in all times, from the days of John to day of Ripon, than this of which it is now intended to deprive us, the right of trial by our peers. Had the exigencies of Government necessitated the taking away of this liberty, we must have bowed to the sacrifice; had even administrative inconvenience been proved, it might have been our duty to submit; but as has already been so eloquently pointed out by the preceding speakers, not even the slightest present inconvenience could be shown. This Ilbert Bill, gentlemen, was set on a tripod. Its first support—to do away at once completely with every race disqualification—which you must acknowledge, gentlemen, seemed a very pretty sentiment on paper, was no sooner enunciated than the impossibility was seen. There are a hundred race privileges or other race disqualifications recognised by the laws of India, while this Bill only proposed to deal with one of them, leaving the other ninety and nine intact; while to abolish even this little one, several fresh disqualifications hitherto unknown to the law had to be created. The second support, administrative convenience, soon proved a myth also. No present inconvenience could be discovered, and although some people say that, when Natives by their ability rise into higher positions in the service, inconvenience more or less may occur, this now seems rather problematical, and in any case our rulers should have remembered the Scripture precept—"sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." These two supports having disappeared, the third alone is left, with blatant Babus, and Englishmen ignorant of the facts, trying to hide it and wrap it up in their verbiage, whilst they vainly try to balance the Bill upon it, but here we see it naked and revealed. Three Bengali Baboos say their susceptibilities will be hurt if they are not permitted an opportunity of putting Englishmen—and, worse luck, Englishwomen—in prison. For this, gentlemen, our birthright is to be taken from us, and our liberty is to be jeopardised, whilst justice herself is to be thrown down from her pedestal by a benevolent Government, desirous of affording this gratification to these, in their own place, no doubt, very worthy persons. When this Bill was introduced, Lord Ripon pledged himself to give the greatest weight and the most deliberate consideration to the opinions both of his own servants and of the independent Europeans that might come before him, and he held himself to some extent aloof from debate, as he said he desired to remain unprejudiced for or against the Bill. Since then resolutions strongly condemning the proposed change in the law, and giving good reasons for the condemnation, have poured in upon him from wherever Europeans have met together in India; but no notice has been taken of our Resolutions, our petitions have been ignored, and although the opinions of the high officials throughout the Empire whom he consulted have been before him for months, and these nearly unanimously condemn it, yet the Bill has not been withdrawn. These official opinions may be divided into three classes: the first, a few, say the Bill should do no harm, but a little good. A larger number say its introduction was a mistake, but, this having been done, some Bill of the kind should now be passed to save the "izzat" of the Government, which would otherwise look still more foolish than it does at present. The great majority, however, condemn the Bill from beginning to end, and it is instructive to observe that in those last are included not only the present Assam officials, but all who have ever been in the province. From the able minute of Mr. Edgar, now Commissioner of Dacca, who first came amongst us twenty years ago, to the eloquent and exhaustive letter of our present popular Deputy Commissioner, John Knox Wight, their opinion has been unanimously against the Bill, as uncalled for, unnecessary, unjust, and likely to do grave injury to the British population scattered throughout the land; while the men who guard the "gate of India" in the Punjab all strongly condemn it, not only for those reasons but for this graver reason also, that, if passed, it will endanger the stability of the Empire. If, in face of such warning, the Government is mad enough to pass this Bill, we on our part are resolved that we will not accept it. What shape our resistance is to take should be left to our leaders to decide, in order that throughout India it may be unanimous and determined, but for my part I think it should be passive only declining to appear when summoned, refusing to plead or defend ourselves before a native magistrate, or in any other way acknowledged his jurisdiction over us, but always submitting to force and suffering the consequences, while aid, moral and material, should come from all the rest of India to those who suffer in the cause, so that they might lose as little as possible, while they fought our battle. At the same time we ought in all other things to be obedient, and in no way embarrass the Government, but assist it as we have done hitherto, whether as volunteers or in any other way, by all the means in our power. Were this policy carried out all over India unanimously and completely, I have no doubt that in a short time, when they learned the facts, our countrymen at home would come to our help, they would demand the repeal of the obnoxious law, and it would be established for ever through our action that a Briton in all parts of British territory and dominion can only be judged by his own countrymen. In all the discussion that has taken place, we have felt how the weak point in our armour has been the compromise of 1872, and over and over again have been taunted with it that this is no constitutional principle for which we are fighting, seeing that our brethren in the presidency towns may be tried by native magistrates. Well, gentlemen, when a Bengali is accused of forcible robbery, he does not usually plead that as he had robbed the man next door with impunity, he thought this one had no right his property either—but let that pass—our Calcutta friends thought they chose the lesser of evils, and that by the sacrifice of the town they had preserved this birthright to the rest of India for ever. They now see that not only were they mistaken in this, but that the enemy having forced the town now makes it his base to take the country also; and as this was a compromise between those who defended our rights, and a despotic Government which refuses to abide by the compact, we call upon our countrymen to carry out their side no longer, but the day the Ilbert Bill becomes law to ignore it in the towns as we shall throughout the rest of India. And as it never can be pleaded as an administrative inconvenience that there are no English magistrates in Calcutta, we appeal to the Defence Association there to make this resolution their own, and to lead and direct the Europeans all over India in their resistance, and we on our part will carry out their orders. We must obey our leaders, with implicit confidence, and had I not believed that such was already our duty, I would not have taken on me to-day to propose this resolution. I have felt very deeply the responsibility that attaches to it, and had wished it to be laid on other shoulders, while I considered that our chairman himself should have added to its weight by proposing it. But he thought fit to lay the duty on me, and I could but obey my leader's command. However, I trust, before putting it to the meeting, he will tell you how much he feels that the resolution should be unanimously adopted and with loyalty acted on throughout India. In conclusion, I have only to say that, taking all that has happened into consideration, seeing on the one side Calcutta Baboos clamouring for the Bill, which rightly or wrongly they imagine will prove a wedge for the cleaving of British power in India, and that they hope for the overthrow of a foreign Government, I do not blame them, but the fact is theory on the other side, seeing the whole European population, whose prosperity, whose safety, whose very existence, is bound up in the stability of British rule, arrayed against the Bill, which they believe in every way wrong, and likely to lead to disaster. I would support this resolution, did I myself believe the measure harmless—for, if anywhere on the earth, it is here in India, where we are one among a thousand, Europeans should remember and act on the adage—unity is strength.

Mr. WEIR seconded this resolution and said—Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in seconding this resolution, I feel that it is one bristling with difficulties, and one altogether without precedent; here we have always so loyally helped and assisted Government that, with this Bill, as a reward, we cannot help exclaiming "Et tu Brute?" To find anything like a precedent, we must turn to our history of 110 years ago, when we find objectionable measures forced on the American colonists in spite of the most earnest and respectful remonstrances. We have no wish whatever to tread in the footsteps of those colonists, but would merely suggest to our rulers that the English race has not changed. The whole of the English race, except a few interested officials, have unanimously protested against this measure. Such being the case, we should now proceed to work by selecting from each district a few of the most able men to confer together and decide what measures to take to defend our rights. With all men thinking in the same direction, doubtless some proper course to pursue will be arrived at; and that course, whether dogged obstruction or more active measures, will have the strength of unity. With an "Uriah Heap" at the head of affairs at home, we must be careful not to be lulled into false security. This humble man to an Austrian Ambassador likes occasionally to bully an African King, or any people who cannot resist. He has now raised the hue and cry against us that we are aggressive, and a hue and cry, though it be false, is a powerful and dangerous weapon, as we have seen him use it before with terrible effect in the so-called Bulgarian atrocities, which all people now know never took place, and were "manufactured to order." I ask Mr. Gladstone, in these days of rapid communication, with thousands of Englishmen pouring into the country, and with those settled in India re-visiting their homes every few years, are we peaceable law abiding people at home, and the moment our feet touch the shore of India, blind fools who left their reasoning faculties west of Suez, and can only find happiness in aggression? No, gentlemen, we still take pleasure in the same manly sports and games that amused us at home, feel happy and proud when our country is victorious, and grieved when it is humbled, as it has been so often of late by the Radical Government at present in power. Let us try and prove that we are not different from our brothers at home whose hands we shook but a few months ago. It now only remains to prove ourselves own brothers to the English bull dog, and see if we can hold on to our privilege.

Mr. GORDON FRASER, in a few remarks, strongly supported this resolution, and approved of the mover's recommendation to be united, and organised in our action of resistance; and passive resistance, he thought, would be likely to be the most effective.

Mr. C. E. PICKFORD also gave his warmest support to the resolution, and advocated unity of action throughout India, and all the aid we could possibly get from our friends at home.

In a few remarks made by the CHAIRMAN in support of the resolution, he pointed out that he was willing to go any length, but we must be united, and he had already made that earnest appeal to the meeting. He also strongly supported the mover when he advocated our being guided by our leaders. He thought we should at once request the readers of the Defence Association to plan our mode of action in resisting the Bill should it be passed, and then direct as in that action.

The eighth resolution read:—"We desire that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Secretary of the Defence Association for circulation in India and in England; and, as it is only fair, no matter how contemptuously we may be ourselves treated, to let the Government know our resolve, we desire a copy be also submitted to the Governor-General in Council." In proposing which, Mr. R. White said:—Gentlemen, I have much pleasure in proposing the above resolution, as I think our feelings with regard to this ill-advised Bill cannot be too generally known. I think that, had the real feelings of the Anglo-Indian community been fairly represented to the movers of the Bill at home, there would have been no need for this second meeting in Calcutta. I hope and trust that the meetings which have been held here, and in other places, will in course of time have due weight in the proper quarters, and cause them to look upon the Bill as unnecessary and needless for.

Mr. J. B. ATKINS, in appropriate and well chosen terms, seconded this resolution.

The foregoing eight resolutions were, each in its proper place, put by the chairman to the meeting, and carried unanimously amidst enthusiastic cheers, the seventh calling forth the loudest and longest.

The speakers were all very enthusiastically cheered, but, although those who advocated the most forward and active action received the most repeated and prolonged applause, yet it seemed the meeting generally favoured Mr. Doake's proposal of passive resistance, but there was no mistaking the perfect unanimity of opinion that prevailed regarding united and firm resistance throughout India, guided by the leaders of the Defence Association.

It is to be regretted that a few of our number who intended to take an active part in the meeting, from unavoidable circumstances, could only send their proxies—namely, Mr. G. M. Loch, to second the third, Mr. C. E. Jackson, to second the fifth, Mr. D. S. Mackintosh, to propose the sixth, Mr. R. S. Elliott, to second the seventh, and Mr. A. Odling to second the eighth resolution.

Mr. A. QUILLET proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman, and in a few complimentary words said he was sure it would be heartily accorded, and that their best thanks were due to him for the trouble he had taken, and was taking, in this all important question.

In response, the CHAIRMAN was loudly cheered, and given a hearty vote of thanks, and after he had thanked them all for coming forward so well at such a bad time of the year, under many difficulties, the meeting with great force sang the National Anthem, and gave three ringing cheers for our Queen. As the evening was fast coming on, the meeting rapidly and quietly dispersed.

THE ILBERT BILL: HOW IT WILL BENEFIT INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH."

SIR,—In the commencement of these letters I expressed the intention of not using any offensive expressions, and thus far, I trust, there has been no just cause of complaint on this score. But in what I have now to refer to it is a rather difficult thing to express in correct terms what ought to be expressed without the use of words that may be considered offensive. If I do use any such, I may perhaps lay claim to mitigation of punishment on account of "extenuating circumstances." One is, that if offence consists in intention as much as in act, I still plead that I have no intention to be offensive, even when the necessity arises to call a spade a spade. Another is that it has been stated publicly that people may safely follow Mr. John Bright. I heard the honourable gentleman at Leeds, and also Sir Wilfrid Lawson; and I shall probably not use any words that their example and speeches would not warrant.

In looking closely at the whole history, procedure, and arguments respecting the Ilbert Bill, it is difficult not to come to the conclusion that the supporters of the measure act and speak either in egregious ignorance or more deplorable hypocrisy. Let it be understood that I do not like the idea of imputing falsehood to honourable gentlemen. Their intentions may be right, but their practical hypocrisy is the penalty exacted by their adherence to party obligation above the claims of right and against the force of reason. No one can have followed the facts and arguments I have placed before the readers of this paper without coming to the conclusion that there has been much put forth on behalf of the Bill that has been written or spoken in ignorance or guile. It was introduced with the practical falsehood that it had the concurrence of official opinion. This has been abundantly disproved by the returns that have been published. These returns have been compiled in various ways; and not to take an analysis from any opponent of the Bill which might be suspected, I give that compiled by the Bombay Gazette, a paper that has strongly supported Lord Ripon. According to this paper there were for the Bill forty-five, for withdrawal 192, for modification seventy-three. If we take all the latter as being in favour of the measure the majority against it is almost two to one. But many of those who would modify the Bill were practically against it. They would have emasculated it so as to make it practically inoperative, and yet would have passed it, not so much to satisfy the natives, as to save the credit of the Government. The telegram sent through Reuter, giving a practically false summary of the debate in the Council, has been emphasised by another telegram that equally falsified the return of the official opinions. Both these may have been accidental errors; but the time and mode of their transmission require Hebrew faith to arrive at that conclusion. The frequent changes of front as to the objects of the Bill from anomaly to inconvenience, and from that to reflection on the natives and sundry and divers others equally untenable, even down to "Her Majesty's gracious Proclamation," have all been amply refuted. Have these pretended reasons been supported by facts? They have in a way, only the facts have been false, whether in ignorance or by design I presume not to say. It may be as well to give an instance or two. Mr. Childers, at a meeting in favour of the Bill, is reported to have said it was not Mr. Ilbert's measure that the Europeans objected to, but it was the measure of local self-government that was the cause of their anger. Not a word was heard against the Ilbert Bill until the Local Self Government Bill was introduced. "Hear, hear," cried the sages assembled. They endorsed Mr. Childers's "fact." But what was the real fact? Mr. Ilbert's Bill was introduced in 1882, and the Local Government Bill was placed on the anvil in the early part of 1882! I do not wish to impute that Mr. Childers wilfully told a falsehood; but if he did not know that he was practically telling one, he was speaking in presumptuous ignorance. If he did know it, I can only commend him to the vigorous language of Mr. John Bright and the painfully playful expression of Sir Wilfrid Lawson. Lord Ripon introduced the Bill on the strength of official opinion. This was true only in part. He had taken such official opinion as was desired, and the real opinion was not expressed until afterwards, with the result above given. Language, we are told, was given to conceal meaning. This fact must have been present in the mind of Major Sir Evelyn Baring, when he wrote the paper which was published in the October number of the Nineteenth Century. Writing, of course, to inform the English public, he says:—"There are probably a large number of natives in India, who scarcely know that this Bill had ever been introduced, and who would not be affected one way or the other if it were withdrawn." The writer, writing for the English public, must have known that he was constructing a sentence that could scarcely avoid misleading the reader. There is no "probability" in the case. The probability, if there were one, is that not one per cent. of the people of India had ever heard of the Bill, and not one in a million will probably be ever affected by it for good whether it passes or not. They may be affected for good if the Bill does not pass; but the benefit will not be occasioned by the Bill. A few sentences further Major Baring refers to "the mass of the natives who take an intelligent interest in politics." This is essentially a misleading phrase. There is no such thing as the mass spoken of. "Probably" not one in a thousand of the people of India ever heard of Major Baring or of the bogus Budget of Sir John Strachey. So much for the mass of the natives who take an intelligent interest in politics. I am aware that the phrase is capable of a more restricted meaning than the above; but the sentence as written is calculated to impose on the English readers for whom it was written. A measure that has to be introduced and supported in this way is not one to commend itself to the judgment of candid Englishmen. But these statements are innocence itself in comparison with the hypocritical nature of the alleged reasons for it and its possible effect. It is according to its advocates a measure to do justice to the "teeming millions of India," and its immediate effect will be to enable two native magistrates to try Europeans for criminal offences. The more remote effects will be to, in about six or seven years, empower possibly twelve native magistrates to have this power. The utmost possible effect, according to the theory of the advocates of the Bill, will be to enable the whole of the native civil service of India to have this jurisdiction over Europeans. But according to Lord Ripon and his supporters, it is never intended that more than one-sixth of the civil service shall consist of natives. Sir Fitzjames Stephen tells them that finality in legislation is impossible. They have no power to bind their successors, and there is nothing to prevent the next party who succeeds to power from making one-half, or even the whole, of the service to consist of natives. But we will take the proportion that is now admitted to be the utmost possible allowance that the "friends of India" are prepared to concede, namely, one-sixth. Will any of these friends of the teeming millions inform us by what sort of logic or reason they are prepared to do justice to the teeming millions, by protecting them only to the extent of one-sixth, and leaving five-sixths of them out in the cold? If one-sixth need protecting against the "dominant and aggressive European," the whole do. But this statement of the case magnifies the beneficent intentions of the friends of the teeming millions. If there be an aggressive element in the world it is the military power, and it has been so in all ages and nations. The military in India—I mean, of course, the English army—are probably as numerous as the whole of the English civil population put together. But even Lord Ripon does not propose to place the military under native jurisdiction. The Ilbert Bill is not to operate in cantonments, and that reduces the effect of the Bill by at least one-half, and the instalment of justice to the teeming millions is reduced at its very highest possible figure to one-twelfth. But this does not show the full measure of this great boon. The Volunteers amongst the civil population of India probably number over ten thousand, and it will be an awkward matter to deal with them otherwise than according to military law. At any rate, this point raises complications that it were much better to avoid. Seeing, then, the microscopic tendency for good to the people of India that this measure implies, is it not something like a hypocritical pose on the part of its advocates to denounce the aggression of Europeans who are seeking nothing, and to thank God that they are the friends of India, the dauntless advocates of the rights of the teeming millions? The great boon, nay, the very greatest that they ever propose to offer, is to protect the people to the extent of one-twelfth, and to magnanimously leave eleven-twelfths to the mercy of the aggressive European. Truly, in a matter of this kind India may well pray to be saved from her friends. There is no special twelfth part of the people who need protection, and why are not these friends equally friendly to all? They know perfectly well what that means. It means that we should give up the country altogether to native administration, and realise the cry of "Perish India!" It is to the good of India that we should continue to hold and to govern the country. When the people of India become fit to govern themselves, England will not have much business there as rulers, and their occupation will be gone. It was not altogether to the disadvantage of England that the Romans occupied this country for four centuries. We have barely held India for one, and have done much for her. There is more yet to be done; but the day of native rule has not yet come.

HOW IS IT? AND WHO IS HE?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH."

SIR,—I am told that many of my old friends are exercised about the first question, and some people are in doubt about the second. With your permission I will answer both. "How is it that so good a Liberal as Mr. Wilson writes to a Conservative paper on the Ilbert Bill? Has he turned Tory?" The reply is this, that when, in obedience to party cries and in-party interests, an indignity and wrong were being committed to our countryman in India, and positive injury being done to India herself under false pretences, I felt it a duty to do what I could to inform public opinion as far as possible as to the facts. Knowing that by writing to the Conservative paper I should secure the widest publicity, I not unnaturally adopted that course. Though Indian subjects are not generally attractive to English readers, because they are not understood, the editor kindly accorded me space, and I have reason to believe that the nature and objects of the Ilbert Bill are much better understood now than they were before these letters were commenced. The subject is not, strictly speaking, political, though it has been made a party one, and in the interests of the party it seems as though the Government were not unwilling to sacrifice the rights of their countrymen in India, but the interests of India herself. As to my political principles, I hope they are as truly Liberal as they ever were. I believe they are strong enough to take care of themselves, even in the columns of a Conservative journal; and I also trust they are so moderate as to be truly and practically Conservative in the best sense.

As to the second question—my personality—it is not of much importance, but people "like to know." The assertion has been made that I am a brother of Mr. H. J. Wilson, J.P. This is not correct. I am not related to that gentleman in any respect, so far as I know, though perhaps the association of our names may have arisen from the fact that I also am a J.P. Neither am I, as some people imagine, a relative of Mr. Wilson, of Snig-hill, or of Mr. A. Muir Wilson, of oratorical fame. I am often pleased to find myself gratefully remembered as "People's College Wilson," and also frequently as "Calcutta Wilson." I trust this explanation will satisfy all parties, and by placing the responsibility on the right shoulders, free all namesakes from any discredit that may attach to the authorship of the letters on the Ilbert Bill.

THE ILBERT BILL.

THE English papers talk about the attempt of Lord Ripon "to reuterise" the press. The phrase is likely to stick. We see that some Indian papers are still mild enough to acquit the Government about Telegram No. 2. These critics of Lord Ripon's policy swallow without a grimace the story that the message "was turned upside down in transmission." But the points to be explained go a long way beyond anything that might happen in transmission. First, Mr. Cross misrepresented on Aug. 20 the official verdict; second, Telegram No. 2 supported Mr. Cross's statement, as if it had been modelled upon that statement; third, the construction of the telegram conclusively proves that Reuter's Agent did not have the opinions before him; fourth, our own correspondent made an application at Simla for an advance copy of the opinions, and was referred to Calcutta. The Englishman can say whether that paper had a similar experience; fifth, the unfortunate message was mutilated in transmission, and spoilt in editing in London, but this will not account for the "hundred and fourteen" opinions in favour of the measure, nor will it account for the misdescriptions in the body of the telegram, which misdescriptions, however, support Mr. Cross's statement of August 20; sixth, the Government has never ventured to publish the telegram as it was delivered for transmission; seventh, Reuter's Agent has never ventured to declare that he, without any assistance whatever from any official, and solely with the printed copy of the opinions before him, drew up that particular message; eighth, if it were drawn up under such circumstances, then the way in which it supports Mr. Cross is one of the most unaccountable coincidences in the experience of the telegraph; ninth, the message had two clear days' start of everything else; tenth, it was seized upon by the papers which support Lord Ripon as a matter of unbounded gratification, as a confirmation of the view expressed by Mr. Cross, and as a proof of the unscrupulous and unworthy character of the opponents of Lord Ripon; eleventh, the contradiction, or rather exposure, of the misstatements of the telegram was carefully ignored to the greatest extent possible—the Secretary to Reuter's Company in London wrote one explanation to the Times and another to the St. James's Gazette, and yet the Riponite papers endeavoured to minimise the effect of those explanations by the way they noticed them; twelfth, there can be no doubt that Lord Ripon did not for the moment receive immense benefit by the publication of Telegram No. 2; thirteenth, the coincidences of agreement, towards which even misfortunes in transmission contributed, have been too much for the better class of English journals.

The above is the case against Telegram No. 2, and, for ourselves, we decline to surrender our common-sense to the absurd theory that the whole trouble was occasioned by a figure having been dropped out in transmission, and by an addition sum having been perpetrated in Reuter's London Office. We would like to believe Lord Ripon was honest; but, in this matter of the Ilbert Bill, we await from any quarter a proof of his honesty in any one single particular connected with the Bill. The anger and fear of the European community have been provoked by the unfair ways of the Government, quite as much as by the way in which the Bill was a surprise. The questions connected with Telegram No. 2 go far beyond any explanation about errors in transmission. In fact, in face of the obloquy provoked by Telegram No. 1, we believe a reasonable explanation of Telegram No. 2 is not possible. The world will not accept from a convicted Government, in the case of Telegram No. 1, a denial, instead of an explanation of Telegram No. 2. Besides, who is Reuter's Agent at Simla that he should have the folly to write to the private secretary to the Viceroy to "exonerate" the Government? The proverb qui s'excuse s'accuse has more applications than one, and in this case we are afraid the "exoneration" is a principal factor in the indictment.

We have said that Lord Ripon has not in any one particular acted fairly or honestly in this matter of the Ilbert Bill. He has not, indeed, acted up to his own standard, the standard he preached up so sedulously in his cold weather tour of 1882, and he has not acted up to his practice in the matter of the Local Self-Government Bill, the Rent Bill, and almost every other important Bill affecting the natives introduced into the Legislative Council during his administration. In March, 1882, he set his face against any amendments to the Criminal Procedure Code then passed by the Council. One of those amendments would have raised this very question of jurisdiction, and another was publicly shelved. Yet, what do we find? When the correspondence on the Bill was published in India, the Viceroy kept back the despatch of his Government to the Secretary of State and the reply of Lord Hartington. It was not until the papers were published by order of the House of Commons that the true state of the matter was revealed to the Indian public. In India, before that publication, all that was known was that in March, 1882, Lord Ripon had set his face against amendments of the Criminal Procedure Code brought in at the last moment, and, indeed, against any amendments which should have the appearance of tinkering so large a measure. Yet, through the Legislative Department, His Excellency had brought in a most important, a most revolutionary amendment of the Code, thirty-three days only after the Code had come into operation! This was felt to be unfair; was a surprise, and was declared to be inconsistent with the sensible policy as regards the Code enunciated in the speech of March 2, 1882. The publication of all the papers, for the information of the House of Commons, revealed the fact of a divided Council on this measure, and also showed to the astonished European community that Lord Ripon had endeavoured to push this measure forward, so that it might have come into operation on January 1 last, simultaneously with the Code of Criminal Procedure itself? The conduct of the Viceroy in bringing in the Bill was recognised as inconsistent with his speech at the passing of the Code; but his expressed desire to pass the amendment before Jan. 1, 1883, was accepted everywhere as a falsification of a speech of March 2, 1882. Then came the extraordinary description of the Bill by Mr. Ilbert, and his misdescription of the character of the official opinions elicited in regard to it. The whole thing then came to be recognised as a special attack upon Europeans for the most unstatesmanlike of reasons, and for the most inadequate of objects; and it was recognised and resented how singularly, yet how sharply, the treatment of the European community about this Bill contrasted with the treatment of the native community in the case of Bills affecting that community. With the subsequent history of the Bill our readers must be familiar. The telegram of March 9 was only a new illustration of a policy condemned for its unfairness and its tortuous methods. But I what way, in what particular, has Lord Ripon acted honestly in his treatment of this measure? The defence of the Bill has gone all round the compass of sentiment and excuse. Blunder has been followed by blunder, and it has gradually come to be accepted everywhere that the Viceroy never, at any time, meant to act fairly in the matter. Where, in the whole range of English communities, shall we find a state of things such as exists to-day in India? Where shall we find a whole community living in the midst of an alien population, deprived of a privilege to which they attach the keenest regard as conducive to their safety—where in the history of English communities, or in that of England herself, shall we find a powerful, a wealthy, and a necessary community deprived of an hereditary privilege to gratify the vanity of less than twelve officials, English or otherwise? Where shall we find a single Minister imposing his will upon a whole English community against the united opinion of that community, and against the advice of an overwhelming majority of the administrative agency of which he is the chief? There is nothing in all the history of the company of nations which make up the English Empire which can afford a parallel to the attitude of Lord Ripon about this Bill. That attitude is supremely un-English; it is a supremely dangerous precedent against constitutionalism and the application of constitutionalism to India. It places the Viceroy above all responsibility, and makes him the agent of a part of a party, instead of the representative and the honour of England. Further, his position is supported in England by the most extravagant and misleading platitudes on the part of Lord Hartington and Mr. Gladstone. The Viceroy is presented to the people of England as engaged in the endeavour to introduce some higher and nobler development of English rule against the passions and prejudices of a community indifferent to the interests of India, and careless of the mission of the mother country. Anything more absolutely unfaithful to the truth of life in India and the facts of British rule, could not have been put forward even by the audacious insolence of an assured verbosity. The fact is that this Ilbert Bill is in no way called for by any interest of any section of the people of India, or by any development of the higher characteristics of British rule in this country. It will affect only twelve natives in their relations to European criminals, and it will affect no other men in India in no other way whatsoever; but it so happens that, by effecting European criminals in their relation to these twelve natives, it opens a door to a series of concessions and encroachments as regards the privileges of Europeans, the end of which Lord Ripon has distinctly shrunk from describing, and about which he can only give an assurance affecting the year and a half which remains of the period of his own appointment as Viceroy.

Colonel Chesney, Military Secretary to Government, proceeds home on three months' privilege leave on his arrival at Bombay after visiting Quetta and Kurrachee, this month. Lieutenant Colonel Nymarch, Military Accountant General, will officiate for him, and Major Collen, Officiating Deputy Secretary in the Military Department, will act for Lieutenant Colonel Nymarch.

WILL THE COUNCIL PASS THE ILBERT BILL?

Now that the overpowering strength of the case against the Ilbert Bill is fully before the Government of India, in the reports of the whole of the Indian administration, reinforced by the magnificent letters of Mr. Justice Stephen to the Times, and by the strongly-expressed opinions of every non-partisan English journal in England and India, the first question that occurs to every one's mind is, what will Lord Ripon do? But there is another question, that with which we have headed this article, which may yet prove to be more important. We are confident that it is, at any rate, more important than it appears to those who think only of the docile loyalty of the official majority in the Viceroy's Legislative Council, usually so conspicuous when the Viceroy's personal views are opposed to those of the public on matters of no very great moment. What will the Council do?

There is not a man in the Council who can possibly be ignorant of the awful issues involved in the decision they will soon be called upon to endorse or reverse—save only Lord Ripon himself, and Mr. Ilbert, to whose ignorance of India we owe all this trouble. And we venture to say that there is not a man who has pondered the local reports, who does not feel—what is indeed admitted by most of the supporters of the Bill—that its introduction has proved to be the greatest calamity that has befallen India since the disastrous issue of the greased cartridges. What then will they do with it?

There is a sort of vague notion about, that an official member of the Viceroy's Council, avowedly placed there to give a show of "consultative deliberation" to the enactment of the Viceroy's will and pleasure, is bound to resign his office if he finds himself compelled to vote against that will and pleasure, when it has been made a "question of confidence" by the Viceroy himself. But this is, we believe, nothing more than a tradition—useful enough on ordinary occasions, but utterly and obviously inapplicable to an occasion of life and death to the Empire, like the present. No member of the Council can feel himself bound to vote for the Ilbert Bill against his conscience; the issue is too solemn to be regarded as a matter merely of difference of opinion.

We trust we shall not be thought to cast the slightest reflection on the other official members of the Legislative Council, if we point out that there are three members of the Government in that Council, whose position, whose knowledge, and, above all, whose character, must render their votes decisive of the fate of the Bill. Of course, we refer to Sir Steuart Bayley, Sir Donald Stewart, and Mr. Hope. We have no hesitation in stating what we know to be the conviction (or rather, the certainty) of all those who are qualified to speak on the subject, that these three distinguished officers are, each and all of them, entirely above the suspicion of being biassed in their decision by any hope of reward, or fear of punishment, either from the Government or from the public. With regard to them, the question those who know them are asking themselves is, not "Will they be influenced by improper motives?" but "Will they, having lived all these months in the thick of the controversial fray, be able to decide the question judicially, on its real and permanent merits, and with no reference to the temporary perturbing influences now at work?"

Sir Steuart Bayley's position in this matter—in regard to the opinion that will be formed of his decision by those who are not acquainted with the circumstances—is perhaps the most cruel in which a high officer of the Government could possibly be placed. Every one knows that Sir Steuart Bayley is the officer who, in the ordinary course of events, and if there had been no Ilbert Bill, would have succeeded Mr. Rivers Thompson in the post that is the highest prize of the Civil Service. And consequently, the superficial observer, if cynically disposed, is certain to say, if Sir Steuart Bayley votes for the Bill, that he has done so to obtain this preferment from the Government. On the other hand, if he votes against it, it will be said that he has done so to avoid making his lieutenant-governorship an impossibility. The dilemma aptly illustrates the conclusion we have often urged in these columns, that the Viceroy's Councillors should, whenever possible, be chosen from those who are not in the running for any great prize—not so much because of the actual bias produced, as because of the suspicions of bias that must be inevitable. We trust that, in Sir Steuart Bayley's circumstances, the obviously balanced nature of the objections, that will be taken to his vote in any case, may relieve him from what is certainly an unjust suspicion. Looking to the opinion expressed by him, in the debate of last year, as to the "reality of the danger" of false charges and the like in the Mofussil, it seems difficult to doubt what his decision must be. The only danger is, that having been exposed for many months to the full violence of the storm of opposition aroused by the unhappy Bill, he may be led to pay too much attention to this, an inseparable accident, rather than an essential, of the Bill,—and may accordingly support some infinitesimal portion of the Bill on the utterly absurd grounds that it will "do no great harm," and will "teach the non-official Europeans a lesson." The same danger applies to the votes of Sir Donald Stewart and Mr. Hope. In each case we are confident that the vote will be given with most rigorous conscientiousness, free alike from the bias of fear and from that of expectation; and in each case it would be impossible to doubt the result, but for the unfortunate noli-me-tangere spirit, apt to be generated by Simla, and to be irritated by too free-spoken opposition.

Of course, every English "independent" member of the Council—using the words in its ordinary sense of "non-official," and not in the Ripon-Reuterian sense in which it was used in the famous "Telegram No. 1"—will vote against the Bill. In regard to the minor official lights of the Council, the "additional" official members, it may be admitted that mankind, after all, is very apt to be human—and that the position of an "additional" official member is in fact almost the exact reverse of that "independent" one which Lord Ripon induced Reuter's Agent to think it. Mr. Hunter's recent letter to the Times shows that one at least of those lesser stars intends to shoot straight, to order. On the other hand, the Civil Service is undeniably liable to extraordinary deviations from the primrose path of promotion into the rough and thorny ways of independence; so that it is very difficult to forecast the voting of the remaining "additional" members.

If any considerable or important part of the Bill be retained by Lord Ripon, it will of course be thrown out, whether it be made a question of confidence or not; and this is what should be hoped for by every well-wisher of the Empire—next to the actual withdrawal of the Bill, which would be the act of a "still, strong man," and is therefore not to be expected from Lord Ripon. The worst thing that can happen for the good of the country is, that Lord Ripon should succeed in whittling down his Bill to such attenuated proportions, that its very minuteness, exasperating alike to Natives and to Europeans, may possibly salve the conscience of some of those members of council who would fain vote against it, but dare not.

RUSSIAN PETROLEUM AND INDIA.

THE enterprising organ of Mr. Joseph Cowen, M.P., the Newcastle Daily Chronicle, hearing that Mr. Marvin was preparing for issue an account of his recent journey to the petroleum region of Russia, has arranged for the series to appear in its columns before circulating in public in a book form. Between now and Christmas the series will run its course in the Chronicle, accompanied by sketch maps, and for the first time a detailed account will be given of the petroleum treasures of the Caucasus, compared with which those of America melt away into insignificance. The petroleum region lies round Baku, which has just been connected with Batoum by railway. Before the commencement of the Russo-Turkish war the production of Baku was only 850,000 barrels; last year it was 6,000,000 barrels. The number of wells is now 375, and flowing wells yielding from 2,000 to 4,000 barrels daily, are of common occurrence. Sometimes wells are sunk yielding 10,000 barrels a day. To convert the raw petroleum there are nearly 200 refineries at Baku, and these have within the last few years not only nearly driven the American burning oil from Russia, but have occasioned a glut of kerosine, which can be sold so cheap that the American article is also being expelled from Germany and Austria. The petroleum of the Caspian has the quality, invaluable in the East, of having a flashing point of temperature 30 or 40 degrees higher than that of the American product. A heavy burning oil can readily be made from it which is practically inflammable. It is, therefore, well adapted for India, and already, we hear, arrangements are in progress for despatching before long large consignments to Bombay and Calcutta from Batoum, the new Black Sea outlet of the Caucasus petroleum. This is likely to lead to an important trade between the Black Sea and India. The Baku product is so cheap that it is being sold at Baku at the rate of ten or twelve gallons for a penny; although Baku sends away 240 million gallons of kerosine every year, and all the steamers in the Caspian and the locomotives on the Transcaucasian railways burn petroleum fuel. During Mr. Marvin's recent journey to Baku he saw a fountain of oil flowing from a well 300 feet high, or twice the height of the Great Geyser, and giving its owners, without any pumping, 50,000 barrels, or 2,000,000 gallons of petroleum every day. For want of a larger market than that of Russia, much of this was flowing away into the sea. This wonderful supply and barbarous waste must be surely unknown to those pessimists, who have been predicting an early failure of the petroleum supply of the world. As a matter of fact, the Caucasus can supply twice as much as Pennsylvania, and we may expect a heavy fall in prices once it makes its way into Europe. This Russian capitalists are striving to accomplish without extraneous support, stimulated by the immense fortunes which have been realised during the last few years by some enterprising Swedes who have gone into the trade.

THE SECOND "GARBLED TELEGRAM."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ENGLISHMAN."

SIR,—As the arrival of the mail bringing the text of the Reuter's telegram about the published opinions on the Ilbert bill has led to a revival of the agitation which that telegram originally produced, and as the agitation continues, notwithstanding the facts already made public, to be marked by misunderstanding and misconception, I have been urged to place on record a full history of the subject of controversy.

As you are aware, newspapers and newsagencies guard very jealously the right to keep secret their sources of information, and it is, to say the least, remarkable that notwithstanding the existence of this well-known privilege, Reuter's Company should be asked by the Indian Press to disclose the source of information whence the telegram was derived. However, waiving the privilege for this occasion, I beg to state that the facts of the case are these:—A copy of the official papers on the Jurisdiction Bill was supplied to me as the representative of an important news-agency in anticipation of the appearance of the Saturday's Gazette. No table of figures, giving the number of opinions for or against the Bill, was included among the papers, and I myself compiled from the latter the telegram which appeared, in a mutilated form, in the English papers of the morning of Saturday, the 8th September. As it is by no means an unusual thing to the Press to be supplied with early copies of official papers, I presume I need not dwell on this point further.

As all the opinions which had been called for had not been received at the date of publication of the Gazette, the telegram correctly stated that "a large number" were published.

The figures contained in the telegrams as sent were, as stated in the Times by the Secretary to Reuter's Company, two, namely, 114 (one hundred and fourteen), and 205 (two hundred and five). In course of transmission to England the latter figure was changed into 26 (twenty-six), it has now been ascertained, in the Telegraph Office at Buxhore; and the telegram, as received by Reuter in London, contained the two figures 114 and 26. As regards the total of 140, given in the published telegram, the following note from the Secretary to Reuter's Company to the St. James's Gazette explains the matter:—

"With reference to the paragraphs in your issues of yesterday and to-day bearing upon our Simla telegram of Friday last, I beg to explain that the error upon which you dwell was simply the result of the original blunder in the transmission of the figures. In editing the telegram, the numbers 114 and twenty-six were added together. Our Simla correspondent is, therefore, quite blameless in the matter."

The process known as editing is, you are aware, no unusual course in dealing with a telegram before publishing it. The process means no more than that a telegram being, when received necessarily, couched in abrupt and broken sentences, is put into suitable shape for publication. In the present case, the editing practised was of a simple kind, consisting merely in the addition of two figures to obtain a third. It follows from this explanation that the theory that the telegram "must, from the nature of the case, have contained, when received, an arithmetical proof of its having been incorrectly transmitted" (Englishman, Sept. 21.) falls to the ground.

With regard to the broad division of the opinions into supporters and opponents of the principle or policy of the Bill, it may be explained that no more refined classification was attempted, because it was thought that the general statement, whilst essentially sound, would be better understood by the English public. To have given a class of opinions as favouring a "compromise" would have been misleading, unless accompanied by greater detail of explanation than I felt justified in venturing upon. It is to be noted that the officers who have been included under that heading by these papers which have adopted this system of classification, whilst suggesting various modifications of particular clauses of the Bill, expressed their opinions that the measure should not be withdrawn. Some modifications suggested are of a trivial kind, whilst others, as in the case of those proposed by the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, would largely extend the scope of the Bill. It seems a hardly sound system that would withdraw opinions like the latter from among the category of supporters of the Bill, and place them in a category labelled "compromise." Such a classification may be so far correct as implying that those so labelled had objections to certain details of the Bill, but to those ignorant of the modifications proposed it would be altogether misleading. Unless that information is supplied, the broader distinction of supporters and opponents of the Bill seems to represent a truer picture of the facts of the case; and it was impossible to supply it within the limits of a brief telegram. If we suppose the Bill were a measure before the House of Commons, and the officers and others consulted members, it seems reasonable to infer from their recorded views that those who have been classed as favourable to a compromise would be found, together with those who approve of the Bill as it stands, among the "ayes" on a division after a second reading when the principle of the Bill had been discussed, and would bring forward their proposals in the way of modifications subsequently "in Committee." The figures in the telegram meant that of those consulted, 114 had voted "aye," and 205 "no." The real question at issue was whether the Bill should or should not be withdrawn, not whether it should or should not be modified.

With regard to the figures actually given, I would draw your attention to the table below. You will observe that of the Indian papers which have attempted an analysis of the opinions, no two have reached a like conclusion.

The Englishman of Sept. 8 explains that the figures it gives in that day's issue are "exclusive of High Courts and Heads of Governments." If we add these, its figures will be—

| For the Bill in some shape. |    | Withdrawal.              |     |
|-----------------------------|----|--------------------------|-----|

Total ... 88 Total ... 273
The figures in the Englishman of Sept. 10 are stated to be "exclusive of Heads of Governments." If we make this addition, they become—for the Bill in some shape, 104; withdrawal, 203. Total, 307.

The figures in Reuter's telegram include all officers whose opinions are recorded; or whose names are specially referred to in the recorded opinions of their superiors; and all private individuals and bodies who have been officially consulted.

REUTER'S SIMLA AGENT.

Simla, October 9, 1883.

P.S.—I observe that the telegram, as printed in the Englishman of Friday, Oct. 5, is not the telegram as it appeared in the English papers, as you will notice on comparison.*

*The Reuter's telegram from Simla gave the following as the summary of opinions:—

Out of a total of 140, 114 are in favour of, and twenty-six opposed to, the principle or policy of the measure. Among those who approve the Bill are the Governor of Bombay, the Governor of Madras, the Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces, the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, the Chief Commissioner of British Burma, the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, the majority of the members of the High Court of Judicature in Madras, Bombay, and the North-Western Provinces, and the majority of the members of the Chief Court of the Punjab. The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, the Chief Commissioner of Assam, the Residents of Hyderabad and Rajpootana, the Commissioner at Kurg, and all the members of the Bengal High Court of Judicature, with the exception of the native Judge, are opposed to the Bill.

The chief arguments adduced in favour of the measure are that it is in accordance with the policy of the Indian Government; that if the native Judges are fit for the position they occupy, they are competent to try Europeans; that the existing law produces administrative inconvenience; and that natives already possess jurisdiction over Europeans in the Presidency towns.

On the other hand the reasons advanced against the Bill are that the educational attainments of the natives do not counter-balance the material difference which exists between their feelings and customs and those of Englishmen, and further, infeasible right of the latter to trial by their peers. It is also urged that the Bill jeopardises the personal safety of Europeans; that there is a material difference between town and country, that the measure will create rather than remove administrative inconvenience, and will have an irritating effect upon the growing harmony between the two races; that it does not bear the stamp of finality; that it will alarm capital; and that the Indian law already recognises a large number of exceptional privileges.

Reuter's Simla Agent has written a letter which, with the assistance of the Telegraph Department, clears up the mystery of the way in which 205 became 26; but we are not satisfied; the Telegraph Department having gone so far as to publish the original telegram exactly as it was received. Did the Simla Agent give the numbers in figures, or did he write the numbers? We ask this question because they appeared when printed as if they had been written, and we cannot understand why Reuter's London Office should have taken the trouble to translate figures into writing when figures would have told the story equally well or even better. If a "0" were dropped out, and a "5" converted into a "6," then figures must have been used in the message as it was sent from Simla, and the "Clerk at Buxire" has the credit of being one of the most mysterious minded men who ever made a mistake. Unfortunately, in order to clear this matter up thoroughly, it seems necessary that the Telegraph Department should publish the message as received. So far as it goes, the letter exculpates the Simla Agent; but that letter ought to have been published a month ago and unfortunately the "extraordinary discrepancy" fitted in with the reputation the Government had won; with the statements, or rather misstatements, of Mr. J. K. Cross, and apparently with the Government purpose. However, it may be explained, we are very doubtful if any explanation can undo the unintended gain which the mistake wrought in favour of Lord Ripon's policy.—Indian Daily News.

Reuter's agent at Simla is anxious that the publisher should know exactly where his now celebrated message was mutilated. It was a clerk in the telegraph office at Teheran, who, in transmitting the message, changed the number 205 to 26; thus making it appear that only 26 officials were against the Bill. Obviously, the clerk should be appointed to the first vacancy in the Viceroy's Council, where his attainments would be most welcome.—Civil and Military Gazette.

In our correspondence columns will be found a letter from Reuter's Simla Agent, in which, among other things, he explains his reason for classifying the opinions in favour of a compromise as being in favour of the Bill. That explanation is that "no more refined classification was attempted, because it was thought that the general statement, whilst essentially sound, would be better understood by the English public." * Or bill as it stands. Not distinguished.

with a gentleman, who, having white, black, and various shades of grey, to classify, considers himself justified in lumping all the greys as white, without further remark, in order to avoid the difficulties of a more refined classification, would be useless. This analogy is, however, unduly favourable to Reuter's Simla Agent, for while it would be as erroneous to call grey black as to call it white, less violence would have been done to the truth by classifying the opinions for a compromise as against the Bill, than by describing them as for it. It would have been true, though not the whole truth, to have said that the opinions for a compromise were against the Bill. It was absolutely untrue to say that they were for the Bill.

The utter hollowness of the excuse that some of the opinions in favour of a compromise were for extending the scope of the Bill, will be apparent to any one who compares the number of such opinions with the number of those in favour of curtailing the scope of the Bill.—Englishman.

Major Nesbitt, West Riding Regiment, and Surgeon E. Butt are granted leave to England.

The following officers accompany the Commander in Chief to the Bangalore camp:—General Gordon, Commanding at Moolton; Colonel Gough, 12th B.C.; Colonel Hudson, 28th P.N.I.; Colonel Marter, Dragoon Guards; Colonel Hughes, Dorsetshire Regiment; Lieutenant-Colonel Biscoe, Assistant Adjutant General; Major Pearson, D.A.Q.M. General; Major Covey, Durham Regiment; Colonel Lance, 2nd Punjab Cavalry; Colonel Griffiths, 3rd Sikhs; General Greaves, Adjutant General; Sir C. Macgregor; Colonel T. Hughes, D.A.G.; Colonel Collett; Lieutenant-Colonel Sandford; Colonel Moore; and Captains Haines, Owen and Stewart attend as A. D. O's. Dr. Davis will also be present.

Colonel Morton, Warwickshire Regiment, is promoted to assistant adjutant general, vice Colonel Farrington, and Major Brind, Connaught Rangers, to deputy assistant adjutant general, vice Colonel Morton.

Troops arriving in India via the Cape of Good Hope receive fifty days' pay as an advance, instead of forty days.

Sir F. Roberts, Commander in Chief, arrived at Bangalore on Saturday morning, Oct. 20, on a short visit, and was a guest at Petworth House. His Excellency left again in the evening.

General Ellis having assumed command of the Nagpur Brigade, Colonel P. W. L'Estrange who has been officiating, returns to the command of the artillery of the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force.

The Governor General in Council has been pleased to sanction the formation of another Cadet Company to be attached to the Administrative Battalion, Presidency Volunteers, and to be styled the "Calcutta Volunteer Cadets."

The Indian Government steamer Olive, Capt. W. J. Powell, sailed on Oct. 20 for Aden, with the 4th Regiment N.I. and some field guns.

Volunteers from Mussoorie and Dehra have been invited to join the camp of exercise at Meerut from Jan. 5 to 22.

It is notified in general orders that H.M.'s Indian troopships will leave Bombay on the dates specified below:—The Malebar, Oct. 31, sailing for Aden; the Euphrates, Nov. 10; the Jumna, Nov. 21; and the Serapis, Dec. 1.

The 1st Sikh Infantry marched in relief from Abbottabad on Oct. 4, taking en route for its new station, the duty of escorting a survey party to the Tukht-i-Suliman.

Relief camps will be formed, during the relief season, at Attock, Rawalpindi, Meean Meer, Umballa, Meerut, Tondu, Cawnpore, Allahabad, Jubbulpore, Sahaspore, Muddapore, and Dinapore, for corps moving towards Bombay on their way to England, or marching in relief. At Allahabad and Jubbulpore, officers will be appointed to supervise the transport arrangements.

With reference to the movement of the 1st Pioneer N.I., from Secunderabad to Trichinopoly, the municipality of the latter town have addressed Government, inquiring where it is intended to locate this regiment, as without proper lines the same objections which prevented the 17th Regiment from being sent there still exist.

A contemporary understands that his Excellency the Commander in Chief and staff, and the officers who are to accompany him to the camp of exercise at Bangalore, are expected to proceed from Calcutta to Madras about Jan. 7 next in the British India Company's steamer Navarino.

KANGRA VALLEY INDIAN TEA GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

7, NEW COVENTRY STREET,
LEICESTER SQUARE.

The object of the Planters who have formed this Association is to establish a business for the direct supply of Tea from the Plantations of the Kangra Valley to the Public.

The distinctive feature of the business of this Association is, that the Tea is delivered to consumers in the original One-lb. tin foil lined parcels in which it is packed in the Valley, and it is guaranteed to be Absolutely Pure. There are three qualities, retailing respectively at 4s., 3s., and 2s. 6d.

The Association hopes that it may, without presumption, safely recommend this Tea to the Public, believing that it will continue to give the greatest satisfaction.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

"A quaint and undoubtedly clever book from the pen of a native of India. The volume consists of a series of short sketches of scenes and people in Gujarat, which may be regarded as typical of classes of the community, their ways of life and modes of thought. Mr. Malabari's English style is remarkably good, and seldom exhibits any want of ease. His book is of special interest as throwing some light on the real feeling of the natives with regard to their 'British rulers.'"—Daily Telegraph.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE—Dr. J. O. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances deriving elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances of the efficacy of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhoea and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhoea, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 55 & 56, Russell St., W.C.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & Co., Members of the Pharm. ## THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EX- PRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 250 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE ILBERT BILL.

SECOND LETTER FROM THE HON. MR. JUSTICE FITZJAMES STEPHEN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—In my last letter to you on this subject, I endeavoured to show the nature of the privileges at present possessed by Englishmen in India in reference to criminal prosecutions and the inconsistency of the course taken by the Government of India. I propose in this letter to deal with the single reason alleged in its favour—which is, that "it is anomalous that while natives of India were admitted to the Covenanted Civil Service, and held competent to discharge the highest judicial duties, they should be deemed incompetent to be justices of the peace, and to exercise jurisdiction over European British subjects outside the Presidency towns." The statement of this argument appears to me to suggest the answer to it. Since the facts stated would be anomalous if the legal incompetency of native judges to try Europeans was founded on any intellectual or moral incompetency, the presumption is that it is founded on something else which involves no such anomaly, and, in truth, it is founded on something else—namely, the wish of Europeans to be tried by their own countrymen, apart from all questions of moral or intellectual competency. The anomaly complained of thus exists only in the minds of those who give an incorrect explanation of the motives on which the institutions which they describe as anomalous are founded.

Be this as it may, I contend that this argument and the assertion with which it is connected, that a slight is imposed by the existing law upon native officials, is founded upon a complete misconception. I said so emphatically and earnestly in 1872 when the subject was under discussion in the Legislative Council. My argument prevailed and persuaded the majority of the Council to reject a proposal which would have anticipated the present measure. The argument which I used has never been answered by those who are in favour of the present Bill. It has never even been noticed by them. The only notice taken by the Government of India in 1882 of the debate in 1872 consisted in their adoption and circulation of a memorandum drawn up by Mr. Gupta (the native civilian whose supposed grievance has caused all this disturbance) of the arguments used by the speakers on his own side of the question. That Mr. Gupta should refer to those parts only of the debate which favoured his view was natural and proper. That the Governments of India should send his memorandum to the Local Governments and to the Secretary of State without a hint that any other arguments had been used was, I think, unfortunate; nor was it wise, if they wished for unbiased advice from the Local Governments, to give them in the circular letter addressed to them a strong hint as to the answer which they wished to receive. I am far from thinking that the local Governments are improperly subservient to the Government of India, but they naturally and properly wish to support it and to enter as far as possible into its views, and when they are asked in substance, "Do you not agree with us in thinking this an anomaly which should be removed?" it is natural that they should be predisposed to say, "Yes," especially if ex parte documents are put before them as affording materials for their opinion.

The effect of this is set in a strong light by the following extract from the opinion of Mr. James Lyall, Resident of Mysore and Chief Commissioner of Coorg. When acting as Financial Commissioner of the Punjab in 1882, Mr. Lyall was consulted as to the proposal then made by the Government of India, which differed widely from the Bill they afterwards introduced. He replied briefly "that it seemed necessary on grounds of administrative convenience" to give jurisdiction over Europeans to Covenanted District Magistrates and Sessions Judges. He was consulted again in the early part of the present year on the Bill as introduced, and his answer contains the following passage:—"I regret to have to confess that in the press of business I wrote the opinion in question on a mere perusal of the papers then circulated. Those papers contained Mr. Gupta's extracts from the debate of the Legislative Council which occurred when a similar amendment of the law was proposed in 1872. His extracts were from speeches by the 'Ayes' only; since then I have read the speeches by the 'Noes.'" After mentioning other authorities to which he had referred, Mr. Lyall adds:—"I am, in fact, in favour of the entire withdrawal of the Bill."

This shows how the credit for impartiality of the Government of India may be compromised by want of care in the working of a despatch and the selection of enclosures. Such things have an unpleasant effect. I do not suppose that Lord Ripon personally, or the members of the Executive Council are to blame for the use made of Mr. Gupta's paper, but I say distinctly that some one is to blame, and that its circulation has an unpleasant likeness to the false telegrams which have on two separate occasions been forwarded to England in connection with this Bill, with the obvious, though puerile, intention of influencing English public opinion.

The argument which I used in 1872, and which I now repeat with the more confidence because it has been accepted and reproduced by all the Judges, but one, of the High Court of Calcutta, was summed up in these few words:—"The privilege as to jurisdiction is the privilege of the prisoner, not the privilege of the judge." I dwelt upon this at some length, and I propose now to re-state my argument. I think I may claim, without offence, most to understand better than most people what are the feelings of Judges, what distinctions between Judge and Judge a Judge may naturally and reasonably resent, and what distinctions he ought to accept with indifference if it is thought fit to establish them. I think that a Judge not only may, but ought, in justice to himself, to resent any distinction between himself and his colleagues which does not rest on solid avowable grounds, and which affects, in any way his rank or his pay, or implies that he is less fit than they are to discharge the general duties of his office. He ought, in short, to resent any distinction which implies that he is their moral, social, or intellectual inferior. Any one who tamely acquiesced in such a distinction would, I think, act in a manner unbecoming a man of spirit. If, however, he is in these essential respects on an equality with other members of his class, I think that he ought to be satisfied, and that if, for some grave public reason, it is thought advisable to make between the duties of different members of the same class a distinction which implies no moral, social, or intellectual inferiority, which in no way affects rank or pay, and which involves nothing more than a division of labour, a Judge ought to acquiesce in it, whether he thinks it wise or not, remembering that Judges, like all other official persons, are made for the public, and not the public for the Judges.

To illustrate this a little, look at our own country. Distinctions of race do not attract much attention here, for obvious reasons, but they exist. It was enacted in 1870 (33 and 34 Vic., c. 77, s. 87) that no man not being a natural born subject of the Queen should be qualified to serve on juries or inquests in any court, or on "any occasion whatever," unless he were an alien domiciled here for ten years. Is this any slight on aliens? Till 1870 all foreigners were entitled to a trial by a jury de medietate lingue. Was this a slight upon the general body of jurors? Take again the case of challenging a juror. A man accused of felony has a right to say to each and every one of twenty persons, "You shall not try me, I give no reasons. Perhaps I do not like your looks, perhaps I have heard something which makes me doubt your honesty, perhaps I think you too honest, but no matter what the reasons, I will not be tried by you." This right exists both in England and in India. Can any one be so foolish as to think that it enables prisoners to throw a slight upon jurors as a class, or that a particular juror who is challenged is insulted? On the contrary, to be challenged must always be a relief, and may be an involuntary compliment. Judges are not competent to try peers of the realm for felony. This may be a good thing or a bad one, but has it ever entered the mind of man that the privilege of the peers constitutes a slight upon Judges and jurymen?

I cannot understand how any one who has had any practical experience of trying criminals can regard it as a privilege to try any particular class of them. I think most Judges would regard it as a privilege to be excused or disqualified from trying any particular class. If there were a proposal that all Irish prisoners tried in England should be tried by Irish Judges, I think that the objection (so far as the Judges were concerned) would come not from the English, but from the Irish members of the Bench.

Take, again, the case of courts-martial. In some countries I believe, such tribunals have an exclusive jurisdiction over soldiers in all cases. In others they have a concurrent jurisdiction. Different views may be taken as to which of these systems is best; but would it occur to any one that the dignity of the Judges was in any way concerned in it?

Apply these considerations to the particular question. The native Judges have the same rank and the same precedence; they have, generally speaking, the same duties and powers in all particulars as their European colleagues; and though they receive nominally the same pay, they receive substantially and in reality, at the very least, twice as much as Europeans. The native Judge lives at home in his native climate, and has none of the heavy expenses entailed on the European by banishment and by living in a foreign country. Moreover, the ways of life of a native are far less expensive than those of a European. His food, his clothing, his lodging, and, above all, the education of his family cost him far less. The European Judges do not feel aggrieved by this, though if they did it would, perhaps, not be wholly unnatural, but when all this is put together I think the native Judges ought to feel that they are, on the whole, singularly fortunate. And now look at their grievance. They are, it is said, declared to be incompetent to try Europeans. I do not like to dispute about words, but it would be more correct to say that Europeans have the privilege of not being tried by them. But what does this so-called incompetency imply? Does it convey the least imputation either on the ability or on the integrity of the native Judges? The very facts which are put forward as constituting the anomaly objected to prove that it implies nothing of the sort. The law as it stands entrusts native Judges with powers which would never be entrusted to men as to whose ability or integrity there was any doubt. Surely, this proves that the privilege conceded to Europeans does not imply any reflection on the ability or integrity of the native Judges; and as I have shown in my former letter, it rests upon entirely different grounds. Suppose my banker were to say, "You have passed an unpardonable slight on me by refusing to receive in payment of a debt due to you a cheque upon me for £5." Should I not justify myself if I could reply, "How can you say I distrust you when I leave in your hands a balance of many hundreds of pounds? The reason why I would not take the cheque offered to me was because I doubted whether the drawer had a balance." The argument to the native Judges is:—"If your ability or integrity were doubted you would not be appointed Judges at all. The reason why you are not legally competent to try British subjects is not that you are in any way, professionally or intellectually, incompetent to do so, but because they like to be tried by their own countrymen."

There are one or two minor points of the anomaly complained of which I pass over for the sake of brevity.

I have now said what I had to say on the really important, the vital part of this controversy; and I hope I have shown that the privilege which it is proposed to abridge involves no injustice, does no harm, and is naturally and reasonably highly valued by those who possess it. I hope I have also shown that the course proposed to be taken in reference to it is itself anomalous and inconsistent, unless, indeed, it is meant as a step towards the abolition of the body of privileges of which it forms a part, and which the member in charge of the Bill professes his wish to maintain. Lastly, I have tried to show that the only reason given in support of it is unfounded in fact, that there is no anomaly to remove, and that the notion of any slight upon native officials is unfounded.

This is enough to dispose of the subject; but the matter has been hotly debated, and so many subjects, some of which have in reality little or no connection with it, have been introduced into the discussion, that some additional remarks are required.

The first observation which occurs is on the defence raised for the Bill that it is necessary for the sake of administrative convenience. Not only is this an afterthought, for the matter was not mentioned in the statement of objects and reasons, but it is demonstrably incorrect. This is proved by the figures given by the High Court of Calcutta and by observations made by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal. There are two classes of native civilians, the competition civilians, who have obtained their position by competition in England, and the statutory civilians, natives admitted by nomination according to a system established in India in Lord Lytton's time, under the Statute 33 Vic., c. 3. Of the competition civilians there are only nine in all India, six of whom are in Bengal, two in Bombay, and "one very junior officer" in the North-West Provinces. Of the civilians nominated under the statute there are in Bengal only six, in the Punjab four, and probably no larger number in the other provinces. It will, therefore, be many years in the ordinary course of things before these gentlemen will be of sufficient standing to be qualified under the Bill to try Europeans. Besides this, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal gives it as his opinion that the second class, the statutory civilians, have in Bengal done little to raise the credit of the system under which they were appointed, or to show that they will "be competent for other than subordinate positions" in the service. According to him, the immediate effect of the Bill would be to confer a capacity of being authorised to try Europeans on two native officers in Bengal and one in Bombay, whence he draws the inference that "the argument from administrative convenience is utterly untenable in the present constitution of the Civil Service." He adds, "If it is untenable in Bengal, where six out of the nine native over-advanced civilians are employed, it can scarcely affect any other administration in the country."

This matter is worthy of notice, not only because it refutes one of the arguments used in support of the Bill, but because it shows plainly what an unnecessary piece of legislation the Bill is. The facts stated by the Bengal Government and the High Court of Calcutta prove that all this disturbance has been created and all this ill-feeling aroused for the sake of a measure which cannot have any effect whatever on more than three persons in the whole of India for, perhaps, ten years to come; and which can have no effect even on those three persons except that of rendering them capable to be authorised to try European British subjects if the Government thinks fit to do so. I do not think that so great a commotion has been made for so trivial an object since the Sepoys were required to handle greased cartridges.

It is said that my argument proves too much, for it would prove that European Judges ought not to try natives. This is an argument of great weight; but the answer to it is, I think, equally weighty. It is that the objection proves too much; for it proves that the British power in India is itself an abuse. No doubt it is an irremediable defect of every part of our system, and of the administration of justice among the rest that it is, and as long as it lasts must necessarily be, administered by foreigners, but the system is highly beneficial, and the administration of criminal justice is an essential part of it. The admitted defect which arises from the circumstances that English criminal Judges are foreigners is inseparable from the system, but it does not follow that because the very existence of the Empire implies that Englishmen in many cases should try natives, natives should be set to try Englishmen when there is no necessity for such a measure and not even any appreciable convenience in it.

After all, Englishmen who try natives are specially educated for the purpose; they pass their whole time perhaps for twenty or twenty-five years in assiduous study not only of their language, but of their dialects, their habits, and their characters; and they are in close and constant official intercourse with large numbers of them. A native set to try Englishmen would not try half a dozen a year, and would have no opportunity of associating officially, or otherwise, with any members of the class of Englishmen whom he would have to try.

An argument in favour of the Bill, greatly relied upon in slightly different shapes by the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab and by Mr. Hunter in a letter lately published by you is drawn from the Queen's Proclamation issued in 1858, and from a section of the last of the Charter Acts, passed in 1833 (3 and 4 William IV., c. 83, s. 87). The Proclamation says, "It is our further will and pleasure that, so far as may be, our subjects of whatever race or creed be freely and impartially admitted to offices, the duties of which they may be qualified by their education, ability, and integrity duly to discharge." The statute enacts that "no native of the said territories, nor any natural born subject of His Majesty therein shall, by reason only of his religion, place of birth, descent, colour, or any of them be disabled from holding any place, office, or employment under the said company." It is obvious that the existing law does not fall within the terms either of the Proclamation or of the Act. Indeed, all that is alleged is that the proposed legislation has more or less resemblance to the passages quoted. I shall not discuss the question whether this allegation is true, because it appears to me wholly unimportant. The Proclamation has no legal force whatever. The Act of Parliament has, no force beyond the legal effect of its words. Neither can bind the Indian Legislative Council, which ought to be guided in the exercise of its discretion solely by its own opinion of the merits of the measure submitted to it, and the extent of its legal authority. There is much misapprehension on this subject. The Proclamation is often supposed to have been authorised by the Act for the Government of India, but this is not the case. The only reference in that Act to any proclamation at all is in Section 73, which says, "This Act shall be proclaimed in the several Presidencies and Governments of India as soon as conveniently may be after such Act has been received by the Governor-General." It was accordingly proclaimed on November 1, 1858, and thereupon the Act came into force. No doubt these parts of the Proclamation which relate to the rights of native Princes and States would in the relations between the Indian Foreign Office and them be properly regarded as binding promises, but the rest of the Proclamation has no legal value whatever, and, in particular, it does not and cannot restrict the powers of the Indian Legislative Council given by the Indian Councils Act, 1861, which was passed three years afterwards. I do not see how the following dilemma can be answered. If Mr. Ilbert's Bill can stand on its own merits it does not want the Proclamation, and if it cannot, it ought not to be supported by it. As a ceremonial, the Proclamation may have been proper, but in any other point of view it is a mere expression of sentiment and opinion, worth as much as the sentiments and opinions expressed would have been without it, and no more.

The Act of Parliament, on the other hand, has, of course, a legal value, but it has no other value. It seems to me absurd to suppose that Parliament can impose upon anyone, and in particular that it can impose on anybody having legislative power, a moral obligation to take some principle as a guide for legislation, and to embody it in definite enactments from time to time, irrespective of all other considerations. Of this, as of the Proclamation, one may say a measure which can stand on its own merits does not want such support. A measure which cannot, ought not to have it.

I will now notice as shortly as I can the way in which the Bill has been received by the different authorities to whom it has been referred, and the course which ought to be taken with regard to it. It is difficult to make a really fair summary of the result of the large number of opinions given. They differ from each other in many details which it would be tedious, not to say impossible, to explain to the English public; each writer, of course, treats the matter in his own way, and many of the opinions given are given by persons unknown in this country. The following observations are, however, carefully made, and will, I think, be found to be substantially correct.

Opinions were called for from ten local Governments—Madras, Bombay, Bengal, the North-West Provinces, the Punjab, the Central Provinces, Assam, Barmah, Ajmere, and Coorg. The officers at the heads of these Governments in their turn collected and forwarded the opinions of a very large number of persons, official and unofficial, in their respective provinces. Opinions were also received from the four High Courts and the Chief Court of the Punjab. Of the ten local Governments, two may be said to have recommended the passing of the Bill as it stands, though even they recommend alterations of very considerable importance. These are the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab and the Chief Commissioner of Barmah. Sir Charles Aitchison's attitude is occupied almost entirely by answering objections made to the Bill. I think he succeeds in showing that some of the objections are unfounded. He uses no argument in favour of the Bill, except a reference to the Statute of 1833, to which I have already referred. Several of his remarks are highly important. He says, "The most thoroughgoing supporter of the Bill would admit that Englishmen as a class are better qualified to be judges of their countrymen than natives are, and that in their cases individual fitness may often be assumed, when in the case of the native it 'would' (should) be thoroughly tested." He thinks that the Bill as it stands "is unsatisfactory" in regard to the class of offences which it renders capable of being made justices of the peace—that is to say, in its most important provision; and in this he is corroborated by nearly every authority consulted. He also suggests that "as an additional guarantee and satisfaction to the British European community the jury system might perhaps be extended to the trial of all important cases affecting European British subjects. But there are obvious objections to such a proposal. The question, indeed, belongs to quite a different category from the principle of the Bill." I may here remark that the Bombay Government opposes, among other things, to give European British subjects a right to a jury in all cases tried before Courts of Session. I think this course would be far less favourable to a pure administration of justice than the law which now obtains.

A jury of three, five, seven, or nine irresponsible and unofficial persons, a majority being Europeans, would probably be extremely partial to their countrymen in out of the way parts of the country where every European knows all the rest. With a European Sessions Judge a full protection is secured to the prisoner and impartiality is secured to the public. These extracts show that Sir C. Aitchison's views and my own differ rather in the way in which we look at the subject than in themselves. He treats it as a matter of broad, general, abstract principle; I look upon it in a far narrower light, as a measure which ought to stand or fall according to its practical utility. The admissions which I have quoted seem to me to show that, viewing the matter practically, we should not differ very widely.

The Chief Commissioner of Burma thinks the Bill ought to pass, though he, too, is dissatisfied with what I may call the qualification clause. His views are remarkable. He "regrets the introduction of the Bill." He "would have preferred to leave the law unaltered." If the question concerned British Burma only he would advise "that the Bill should be dropped." There is no necessity for any change in the law here, and opinion, both official and non-official, is hostile to the proposed amendments." Still, "after giving long and careful consideration, the Chief Commissioner feels it his duty to advise the Government of India to proceed with the Bill. Having regard to the position taken up by the Government in proposing the Bill, and to the character of the opposition, it appears to Mr. Crosthwaite that the best course is to proceed with the Bill."

This seems hard on the European community. If they are silent, the Government can say that they do not object. If they are noisy, they can say they must be taught not to object. The useless and objectionable measure is opposed with too much warmth, it ought to be passed, although it should never have been introduced. These two gentlemen are by far the strongest supporters of this Bill, and even their support is not unqualified.

Perhaps the most important of the opinions given in favour of the Bill—if they can be said to be in favour of it—are those of the Governments of Madras and Bombay, the North-West Provinces, and the Central Provinces. Looked at carefully, they appear to me not only to condemn the Bill, but to condemn it with a severity greater than would have been shown had they formally recommended its withdrawal. In the first place, several of them (I do not notice every minute shade of difference) point out that leading details in the Bill are highly objectionable, especially those which relate to cantonment magistrates and those which prohibit the appointment of unofficial Europeans to be justices of the peace. These are matters too technical to explain here, but they are of very great importance, and they show that the Bill was in these serious particulars most unadvisedly framed.

In the next place, they complain that the Bill as introduced, professedly on their advice and with their consent, was wholly different from the measure which had been submitted for their opinion, and they consider that it ought, before it passes, to be reduced to its original dimensions. Mr. Grant Duff would confine it to covenanted civilians. The Bombay Government would confine it to magistrates of districts and Sessions Judges trying with juries. Sir Alfred Lyall would confine it to magistrates of districts. Each of these recommendations is practically equivalent to recommending a withdrawal of the Bill, for the adoption of any one of them would reduce it to the barren assertion of a principle. As to Mr. Grant Duff's suggestion, there are only nine covenanted native civilians in all India, and none have been admitted by competition since 1879. The suggestion of the Bombay Government about the Sessions Judges and juries would have the effect of giving European British subjects a wider privilege than they have at present, and one much more open to objection. Sir Alfred Lyall's suggestion is even narrower than Mr. Grant Duff's, and it would have almost no practical effect, even after a lapse of many years, because criminal jurisdiction in the districts is hardly ever actually exercised by the magistrate of the district, who has even more important duties of various kinds to attend to. The joint magistrate, as he is called, almost invariably deals with the criminal cases which are dealt with by magistrates.

In the third place, each of these authorities (except, perhaps, the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, who decidedly approves the Bill if confined to district magistrates and Sessions Judges) admits virtually that it was a mistake to bring in the Bill at all, though the admission is naturally veiled in official language. Mr. Grant Duff describes the Bill as "perfectly innocuous," which suggests that he regards it as equally useless. After referring to the enlargement of its scope after he had seen it, he says:—"I dare say the Government of India had very good reasons for enlarging the scope of the suggested changes, but these reasons cannot have been such as to demand urgency." The Bombay Government consider that "the mere disability of natives in this matter is not one that the Governor in Council can regard in the light of a serious political grievance," and they say, "the satisfaction which the change would afford to the natives would be insignificant in comparison with the pain it would cause to the Europeans." Sir Alfred Lyall says, "the question is in no way urgent." He also says that the European community are opposed to the Bill, preferring the law as it stands, and he says, "to this arrangement no demur, so far as the Lieutenant Governor can ascertain, is made by the natives of these provinces at large."

Surely, if all this is put together, the obvious and natural inference is that three of the most important Governments in India take a view of the subject which would be most fully and naturally carried out by simply dropping the Bill, though from a natural wish to support the Government of India they propose to pass it in a shape which would have little or no perceptible effect. The length to which this wish to support the Government of India will carry men who occupy eminent positions in India is strikingly illustrated by a passage in Mr. Grant Duff's minute. He says of the Bill that "to withdraw it altogether would be a grave political error—one of the gravest that has been made in the domestic politics of India for many years. To do so would be to give up to irresponsible people the government of a country which should remain where the law has placed it, in the hands of the Viceroy and his Council, under the general superintendence of the Secretary of State and his Council." I would yield to no one—not even to Mr. Grant Duff—in supporting to the utmost the authority of the Viceroy and his Council and that of the Secretary of State and his Council. Everything depends upon maintaining it, but its most solid foundation and support is a conviction that it is just and reasonable, that it wishes to legislate with a real regard to the natural and proper wishes of those over whom its "overwhelming strength," as Mr. Grant Duff himself calls it, is exercised. It is by giving due weight to just remonstrances, even if they are intemperately expressed, that the Government gives itself a moral right to disregard foolish remonstrances, even if they are respectful. I cannot imagine a less dignified position for a Viceroy in Council to assume than that of saying in substance—"I am sorry I introduced this Bill. I admit that it is wholly unnecessary, and that the best that can be said for it is that it is wholly innocuous. But it has been opposed in an intemperate way by irresponsible—that is unofficial—people, and by way of giving them a lesson to be more civil and submissive in future, I will cut it down to a bare assertion of principle and pass it in that state. I shall thus treat them with the contempt they deserve, without doing them any serious harm."

There is yet one more passage in this minute which I must notice:—"What is meant by such phrases as those used by Mr. Logan about alienating the goodwill of the European community? How could the European community remain permanently alienated from that Government whose existence and overwhelming strength alone make the presence of the European community in this country possible?"

The words which I have italicised, I think, are perfectly true. They afford the strongest assertion which could possibly be given of what I put forward as the foundation on which all legislation about Europeans in India ought to be based—the fact that they are a handful of foreigners in the midst of a vast population, which, but for the "overwhelming strength" of the Government would make their presence in the country impossible. The question asked by Mr. Grant Duff as to the meaning of alienating the Europeans is well answered by a passage in the opinion of the Chief Commissioner of Assam, Mr. Charles Elliott. Mr. Elliott says that the European settlers in Assam "form a larger number relatively to the population than in any other part of India, and their interest in the country is more influential and important than the interest of any other class. They are the one intelligent, energetic, improving class in the province; they are the natural allies and assistants of the district officers; and any event which should set them in determined opposition to the Government would be in a high degree disastrous. The Deputy Commissioner who should be on bad terms with his tea planters would probably deserve to be condemned for want of tact and managing power, and would find himself hampered at every turn, in court and out of court. Already, since this Bill was introduced, the Chief Commissioner has painfully felt the estrangement it has produced, and the delay it has caused in carrying out useful reforms and improvements which were in progress. He thinks, therefore, that it would require a very strong case to justify any enactment which should exacerbate and perpetuate the alienation which at present exists." Besides this, the alienation of the Europeans in India means systematic opposition to the Government, political agitation in England, with all its inevitable misrepresentations and exaggerations, and, at no distant time, the introduction into Indian government of all the machinery of English party politics.

The withdrawal of the Bill is recommended by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal and the Chief Commissioners of Assam, Ajmere, and Coorg. Their observations I need not enlarge upon, because, so far as I am qualified to have an opinion on the subject, I agree with most of them. I may, however, observe that Mr. Elliott, to whom I have already referred, sympathises strongly, which, I admit, I do not, with the sentiment which no doubt suggested the Bill. His provincial officers, he says, "are in every case opposed to the Bill, and unanimously recommend its withdrawal." He joins in the recommendation with regret, but he dreads its effect in exciting hostility among Europeans towards the whole course of policy of which it forms a part. He thinks that, in any event, it should be greatly narrowed in its operation; but he thinks "it is not one of much practical importance, and ought to be withdrawn."

The arguments of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal and of Mr. James Lyall are of the greatest weight and interest, and I may say the same of the paper, which you republished, drawn up by the Judges of the High Court of Calcutta; but, for the reason just mentioned, I pass them over.

The result is this—no local Government in India unreservedly approves the Bill, though two (the Punjab and Burmah) propose comparatively slight alterations in it.

Four (Madras, Bombay, the North West Provinces, and the Central Provinces) recommend that it should pass, with modifications so extensive that what they propose is practically a different measure, the introduction of which would admit great mistakes on the part of the Government of India.

Four (Bengal, Assam, Ajmere, and Coorg) recommend its withdrawal.

I have omitted, for the sake of brevity, which I have not attained, all notice of some very remarkable papers, of which I may just mention one or two. My friend, Sir Charles Turner, the Chief Justice at Madras, sends a most elaborate and in many ways admirable paper, taking a very different view of the subject from my own. It would take me far more space than you could give and more time than I could afford, to show how far I agree and how far I differ from him. He is in favour of the principle of the Bill, but would modify it considerably. There is a paper on the other side, by three Judges of the High Court of Allahabad, which derives much advantage and weight from the practical experience of Mr. Justice Straight, who, I think, is the only Judge in India, with a single exception, who had much experience of criminal business before he left England. If I do not refer to others it is solely for want of space.

There is, however, one class of papers which I cannot pass over in silence. They are papers by natives. Of these the most remarkable are a paper by a native judge of the High Court of Madras, a paper by a native judge of the High Court of Bombay, and a paper by an honorary assistant commissioner at Umritsur. The minute of the native judge of the High Court at Calcutta is not in the supplement to the Pioneer from which I quote.

The Madras High Court Judge argues ably and elaborately to prove his own intellectual and moral competency and that of his colleagues and subordinates to try Europeans, and in this I think he succeeds to a great extent; but in my view this is beside the real point of the question. The Judge of the Bombay High Court writes a very remarkable paper. He thinks that the Bill does not go far enough, that all the privileges of the Europeans should be abolished, and complete equality before the law established. This view is consistent and thoroughgoing. From a logical point of view it is, as I have tried to show, quite unanswerable, and I think that Mr. Justice Nanabhai Haridas makes out his point powerfully and well. For the purposes of the present discussion the Government of India will hardly thank him for doing so. They propose to establish, as durably and finally as legislation can establish them, the very privileges which he proves they are bound in consistency to sweep away.

One of the arguments against such a measure is afforded by a comparison between the papers of the two High Court Judges and that of the Honorary Assistant Commissioner at Umritsur. The High Court Judges obviously belong to that infinitesimally small class of Anglicised natives whose appearance in England produces a totally false impression as to the depth and extent of our influence there. They write and speak English as Erasmus wrote and spoke Latin. If not their native language, it is the language of their education, the language in which they transact business, the language in which is printed every book or paper worth reading which comes before them. Mr. Justice Munthasami Aiyar observes, no doubt with perfect truth, that the native civil servants educated in England, and "those natives who have had the benefit of University culture and education, and have habitually cultivated a high sense of public duty, have no real"—he does not say no pretended—"reverence either for sacred monkeys or idols." Probably not; but to how many of the 200,000,000 native inhabitants of the many countries which are collectively called British India does this description apply? Let us hear on this point the views of Khan Bahadur Aga Kalbi Abid, Honorary Assistant Commissioner of Umritsur. Here are his words:—

"When Providence has decreed that the natives of different countries shall meet, and in course of time form a mixed society, it is natural that one of them should concede some privileges to the other, as a compensation for intruding upon the rights of the other. The British Government—a political name for the British nation—have, in making common and just laws according to their own views—views which are in some cases based on their own national convictions—snatched from the natives the privileges of 'satti' (burning widows), 'balidan' (human sacrifice), &c., and in some cases, as in that of exclusion from inheritance by reason of loss of caste, have also encroached upon our religious feelings. Why, then, the so-called privilege of Europeans 'to be tried by their own peers,' which, strictly speaking, applies only to England?"

This Honorary Assistant Commissioner represents an infinitely larger and incomparably more important section of his countrymen than the two High Court Judges. I know him well by reputation, though not personally. He is most moderate, highly respected by all classes, and was employed in the settlement of the Umritsar district more than thirty years ago. He is, therefore, an excellent specimen of a genuine, unanglicised native, and his argument comes to this—"If you accept the responsibility of your position and are not afraid to assert your superiority and to enforce your own views of morals when they differ from ours, then trial by jury for Europeans is of a piece with the rest; but if you consider all distinctions of race equally invidious and unnecessary, then our views about 'baldan' and 'satti,' and the civil effects of loss of caste, are just as good as yours. And why should you, who have taken away our privileges of burning widows and offering human sacrifices, retain your privilege of being tried by your peers?"

I will, in conclusion, say a few words on the course taken by the Government of India in this matter, which I think has hardly been sufficiently noticed and understood in this country. The Local Governments were consulted on the propriety of a measure totally different from the one proposed, and the measure now under discussion was, with the sanction of the Secretary of State, introduced into the Council, and produced an explosion of indignation. In these circumstances, it seems to me that if the Government knew their own minds one of two courses should have been taken. The wise one would have been to say at once, "We have been mistaken, and the Bill shall be withdrawn." An unwise, but spirited, one would have been to say, "We are supported by the Secretary of State, and more or less by the Local Governments. We duly considered the measure before we introduced it, and we will now pass it." Remonstrance would then have been too late, and would, no doubt, have died away in time. The Government of India took neither of these courses. They did not venture to disregard the clamour they had raised, and they could not bring themselves to give up their Bill. Accordingly they took a middle course—a course which could be justified only if they were really in doubt. They asked everybody all over the country what they thought of the Bill which they introduced in 1883 as distinguished from the Bill which they had asked about in 1882, and they have naturally been told that the two Bills were quite different, and that even if the first was unobjectionable, the second was open to all sorts of objections, and that neither is wanted. In the meanwhile the clamour excited has gone on increasing and developing itself, till it has produced a degree of bad feeling which is lamentable and may be dangerous. The weight of the opinions which they have collected in the course of the present year is, as I have shown, greatly opposed to the Bill. What will the Government do now? Will they act in defiance of the opinions they have asked? If they do, they will stultify themselves, and that to an extent of which people in England have no adequate conception. The collection of opinions on a proposed measure, and especially the collection of the opinions of the parties interested in it, is the one thing which gives soundness and vigour to Indian legislation. It is the substitute (and in many cases by no means a bad one) for Parliamentary discussion, public meetings, and discussions in the Press in England, and to pretend not to see its result or to refuse to give weight to it, unless reasons of surpassing weight and importance can be assigned, is to substitute arbitrary will for the rational exercise of what Mr. Grant Duff truly calls "overwhelming strength." Having appealed to the opinions of the Local Governments and other persons, official and unofficial, the Government of India ought to be bound by them. If they choose to legislate in spite of them they will incur this reproach:—You began by being rash, for you proposed one measure on the strength of opinions obtained in favour of a different and much narrower measure. You went on by being weak; for, having determined to carry your measure at all events, you had not the courage to pass it, and have done with it. You stopped to ask the opinions of those whom you had already consulted as to the value of the opposition which your Bill had excited. You now end by flying in the face of the opinions which you had the weakness to ask, and thus exhibit the worst form of weakness, irrational obstinacy. Even if you should pass the Bill approved by the Local Governments, you stand convicted by your own confession of a blunder. In short, the only manly course is to tell the plain truth, and act upon it, by admitting that a mistake has been made and the Bill should be withdrawn. If you do this your conduct will at least have been consistent and intelligible, however mistaken.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

J. F. STEPHEN.

MEETING AT SILCHAR ON SEPT. 29 TO PROTEST AGAINST THE PASSING OF THE BILL.

In response to a special invitation addressed to the whole of the non-official European community of the Cachar District, a large number of their body met on Sept. 29, in order to further discuss and protest against the provisions of Mr. Ilbert's Criminal Code Amendment Bill.

There were present at the meeting—Messrs. A. M. Bulteel, Dr. Fraser, H. C. Sproull, A. Quillet, A. D. Brown, R. B. Doake, Dr. Jones, W. T. Shave, H. B. Peglar, T. Dykes, Gordon Fraser, A. S. Anderson, A. M. Pogson, E. C. Showers, M. J. Balfour, E. T. Pearce, F. Forbes, J. Bradley, D. P. Thomson, C. W. Griffith, A. J. Preston, H. E. Sanderson, F. W. Plows, R. H. Halford, H. W. Morris, Dr. MacLaughlin, W. H. Chambers, H. Muller, R. H. Macdonald, W. Aitchison, E. J. Jones, F. R. Jones, S. Dible, J. Dowie, J. R. Ross, H. Weir, R. Thomson, P. J. Macdonald, C. H. Moore, G. R. Geale, J. Stinton, J. Grierson, A. J. Reid, R. H. Farquhar, C. E. Pickford, C. MacArthur, A. Spicer, J. Green, C. J. Bell, H. D'A. Allies, E. S. Cornish, S. M. Fasson, J. Sidey, J. O. Bowhill, J. Wilson, A. K. Trotter, R. Balkwill Walker, C. T. Macrae, H. Grant, E. L. Edgar, J. J. Morison, M. G. Jukes, A. Stewart, Dr. Cowen, J. H. M. Borrett, T. Scaife, D. M. McLeod, W. M. Munro, G. Penny, H. Chamney, Honourable R. R. Tyrwhitt, Dr. Dundee, J. Murray, R. J. R. Mackenzie, W. S. Smith, G. S. E. Rice, C. Lawrence, R. H. Mullens, J. Inglis, A. S. Penny, R. G. Craigie, A. L. Bradford, S. D. Jackson, J. Horne, A. E. Butler, W. T. Cathcart, E. F. Skinner, J. Schalch, W. H. Williams, T. Keswick, J. Greig, G. W. Peter, D. McWha, A. B. Woodroffe, P. A. Campbell, F. F. Mackenzie, J. J. Hulbert, C. H. Wright, A. Cooper, W. J. Temple, F. F. Clerihew, J. Mc Illwraith, W. L. Clark, J. Peter, R. Wylie, G. C. Balfour, J. Speid, E. Rawlins, R. White, J. B. Doake, H. Mackenzie, J. B. Atkins, D. Ferguson, J. Downer, W. Black and J. H. Forbes. And there were present by their proxy, Mr. Quillet: Messrs. G. Gray, H. R. Blakeney, F. H. Malet, and T. Smeal; by their proxy, Mr. R. B. Doake: Messrs. C. C. Warrington and P. E. Trierland; by their proxy, Mr. Aitchison: Messrs. Peddie, G. R. Nicholls, T. Towers, E. G. Greenhill, A. Odling, G. A. Smith, J. B. Lawrie, H. B. Yates, J. E. E. Corstorphine, E. A. Sissmore, and C. A. Eglinton; by their proxy, Mr. White: Messrs. C. S. Walliker, H. E. Crawford, Dr. Smyth, W. J. Butler, C. E. Jackson, and T. R. Lawson; by their proxy, Mr. Skinner: Messrs. T. H. Lawrie, Dr. Reed, G. F. Playfair, R. Mackintosh, and J. M. Barry; by their proxy, Mr. S. D. Jackson: Messrs. G. B. Mackellar, C. G. Cockburn, and J. W. D. Clark; by their proxy, Mr. Atkins: A. M. Chalmers, W. Stiefelhagen, A. J. Judge, and D. A. Laing; by their proxy, Mr. Mullens: Messrs. G. E. Noad, and W. C. Noad; by their proxy, Mr. J. R. J. Mackenzie: Messrs. W. Macnab, J. Rose, A. A. Bull, and R. S. Elliott; by their proxy, Mr. Bradford: Messrs. L. Rodwell, and E. Beatson; by their proxy, Mr. J. Peter: Messrs. T. Barter, J. R. H. Lawrie, and J. Innes; by their proxy, Mr. Greig: Messrs. J. C. Allen, and B. W. Halifax; by their proxy, Mr. Rice: Messrs. G. M. Loch and R. A. Clark; by his proxy, Mr. Showers: Mr. D. S. Mackintosh; by his proxy, Mr. Griffith: Mr. D. J. Lewin; by his proxy, Mr. R. Thomson: Mr. C. McLean; by his proxy, Mr. Cornish; Mr. J. A. Thomson; by his proxy, Mr. A. Spicer: Mr. R. Spicer; by his proxy, Mr. Pickford: Mr. W. Henderson; by his proxy, Mr. Bell, Mr. J. R. Henry, by his proxy, Mr. Balkwill: Mr. A. R. Mackellar; by his proxy, Mr. A. Stewart: Mr. Radcliffe; by his proxy, Mr. Black; Mr. H. Mackenzie; by his proxy, Mr. G. W. Peter: Mr. A. Osborn; by his proxy, Mr. Hulbert: Mr. F. J. Stewart; by his proxy, Mr. Wylie; Mr. H. O. Blackman; by his proxy, Mr. J. Speid, Mr. J. McAuley; by his proxy, Mr. F. R. Jones; Mr. T. Blair; by his proxy, Mr. Hector Mackenzie: Mr. H. Playfair; by his proxy, Mr. Dykes: Mr. J. Paton; and by his proxy, Mr. W. L. Clark: Mr. M. Bigge.

The total number of the non-official adult male European population now living in Cachar is 193, or only one less than when the meeting of 21st April last was held. And it will be seen from the above list that there were present at this meeting 118 personally and sixty-eighty by proxy, as compared with 111 and eighty-one respectively at the former meeting. But out of the seven absentees at this meeting two arrived late owing to the boat in which they were coming being delayed, and these had had in their hands two proxies so that out of the total of 190, only four actually were unrepresented. And considering the bad state of the roads, bad weather, and busy time of the season, it speaks incontrovertibly to the energy of our community that there were more by seven present personally at this than at our last meeting.

The officials who attended the meeting were:—Mr. G. W. Place, officiating deputy commissioner of Cachar; Mr. W. Daly, commandant Frontier Police; Captain Angelo, Lieutenants Halls and Vaughan, and Dr. Whitwell, of the Khilat-i-Ghulzie regiment; and Mr. C. A. Soppitt in charge of the North Cachar Hills division of Cachar.

Mr. AITCHISON was voted to take the chair by acclamation, and in his opening remarks said—Gentlemen, it is gratifying to see so many of you met together, but none of us can feel anything but grieved and disappointed, as well as indignant, that the necessity still exists for again having to meet to protest against the passing of that unfortunate Ilbert Bill. And the large number who have gone to the trouble of travelling in bad weather over long distances and bad roads, at this busy manufacturing season, shows the strongest measure of earnestness and determination to make it plain to Government that we can never acquiesce in that obnoxious Bill. I must not take up your time, but before calling on the first speaker I would like to say that it should be fully understood that we are met to further protest against the passing of the Ilbert Bill; but if Government will not listen to us and in spite of everything persists in passing the Bill, we are also met to tell Government frankly and plainly that we cannot accept it, and we will do all in our power to resist it, and prevent its being made of any effect. It should also be well understood by us all that we cannot fight Government by using force, but there are many other ways by which we can fight against the Bill, and eventually compel its repeal. And also I would like here to remark that by speaking out thus plainly we are in no way doing so in any spirit of menace. Government promised to be guided by the opinions of its servants and the public, and now these opinions are before it. The public, or non-official opinion, Government all along has known, is practically unanimous in denouncing the Bill, and crying out for its instant withdrawal. A large majority of the officials, whose opinions have been taken, and published, recommend the withdrawal of the Bill, and as far as I can make out in perusing of those opinions, all the European officials, and a good many native officials also, are against it in one respect or another. And I think it is now very plain that there is not a European in India, if he spoke his full mind, but would rather see the Bill entirely abandoned. But as it is, I think we have to thank the European officials for the free and outspoken way in which they have given their opinions, and more especially those in the Assam Province, with whom we have direct intercourse. There may be a little "sailing with the wind," but I think this is less than we might have expected. In the higher ranks of the service there are some amusing instances of trying to "run with the hare and hunt with the hounds," and the Central Provinces attracted my attention when reading the voluminous reports. Sir John Morris, on his retirement, seems to have given his real thoughts on the Bill, and very reasonably and strongly recommends Government to withdraw it. On the other hand, his successor, Mr. Jones, wants only modification, and goes into a long circle of argument to set forth what it is right to do. He blames the want of political education amongst the non-official Europeans for being the cause of so much agitation and excitement against the Bill. He would educate his party, and so imitate the great statesman who only once tried that on at home. But he does not attempt to account for, or give a reason why so many able men in the honourable service to which he belongs are dead against the Bill. With the overwhelming evidence before it, and the promise made, if the Bill be still gone on with and passed, there is no other conclusion for us to come to than that Government has clearly and shamefully broken its promise. We will be loyal to the Crown and our country, but will fight to the utmost of our power to drive out that Government that would put its heel on our necks, trample on our birthright, and make us slaves. This we will never submit to. The Government cannot possibly say that the arguments against the Bill brought forward by the great majority of officials, as well as non-officials, are "inconsistent with the declared policy of the Crown and Parliament," or are merely based on the single question, "simply because it is a race distinction." Therefore, if it does not listen to and act upon those powerful and overwhelming arguments, Government has clearly broken faith with its servants and the public, and it then becomes a sham, if not an insult, to have consulted them at all. Lord Hartington, the other day, at a debate on the Indian Budget, said very plainly that it would "be a fatal error to withdraw the Bill." So we may be sure that, unless some lucky turn in the affairs of the State should hurl the present Radical Government from its pedestal of power, we are doomed, if possible, to have our "spirit of ascendancy" repressed and crushed. Gentlemen, I hope you will be unanimous in passing the resolutions which will now be brought before you, for we must be united, and it is necessary to sink little differences when we are all so strongly agreed on the one great question that the Ilbert Bill is an illegal and despotic infringement of our birthright. I beg now to request Mr. Skinner to move the first resolution.

On rising Mr. SKINNER said—Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I beg to put for your acceptance the following proposal:—"At the Legislative Council debates on the Ilbert Bill, in February and March last, the Governor General, pledged himself to be guided by the opinion of the Government servants and the public throughout India, and as the consensus of that opinion is almost universal against the passing of the Bill, it having been clearly shown that no failure of justice or administrative inconvenience is the result of the present law, while it was proposed to take away a privilege which, doing no one any harm, was highly valued by every European British subject in India, this meeting deeply regrets that the Ilbert Bill has not yet been withdrawn by the Government." Mr. Gladstone, in the House of Commons, speaks of the Governor General of India thus:—"These men have been the workmen in building up that great and glorious fabric of truly civilised society which it is our duty, and task, and high privilege to administer throughout the vast regions of the world." This none of us here will contradict for a moment, but on the other hand it cannot be denied these great men owe the success of the administration of this great Empire to the upgrudging help they have continually received from that important and truly wonderful body of men, known to us as civilians. This great governing body may with justice be likened to the pendulum of a great clock, of which the Viceroy may be said to hold the works. Lord Ripon promised us he would allow this pendulum, as has been the boast of former Governors General, to remain connected to this clock, and thus allow it to regulate its movements! We are, however, sorry to observe distressing signs that he is inclined to act without it, and thus be like those clocks seen in shop windows, viz., a glass dial suspended by very thin threads, which pretend to work without a proper pendulum! That great governing body of men, the civilians, who have held the reins of Government in India successfully for so many years, and whose opinion Government asked and has obtained, is against the Bill. The Anglo-Indian community have almost to a man petitioned Government against it. Gentlemen, let us once more implore Lord Ripon to abandon what to us cannot but appear an act of pride, and leave the law as it now stands. Let Natives by all means have their full share in the Government of the Empire, but for God's sake respect our prejudice against allowing them to criminally try our wives, daughters, and selves!

Mr. E. L. EDGAR, in seconding the above resolution, said—Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I beg to second the resolution and also the remarks upon it by Mr. Skinner, and to say that about the last event I expected to take place here, or elsewhere in India, is the necessity of still protesting against the further consideration of this infamous Bill, a Bill totally uncalled for, insulting in its nature, and unwise in its conception. If the conceit, I may say arrogance, of the Bengalis has to be considered, and something done to gratify their ambition, why not, by all that is reasonable in man, allow them more, say unlimited, powers over their own people, or the people of India, and not set both races by the ears when an opportunity to meet their ambition for power (but which, put in the present form, is nothing more nor less than a desire to be in a position to turn upon their benefactors) is so naturally to hand, and the persistent wilful blindness in not seeing it so extraordinary. The published official opinions are interesting, if monotonous, to peruse; monotonous only so far as being a repetition of opinions dead against the Bengali being possessed of that all-necessary qualification, integrity, to afford confidence in a European placed in a serious position before him in the Mofassil being fairly dealt with. Again, I ask, affix it is desirable to give these men more power, why can we not let the experiment not attempted on their own people, on the people of India, instead of allowing them to try their spontaneous hands upon us? I should, indeed, like to see the experiment tried, and there can be little doubt there would be, and without one tenth the justification, as great an outcry against the experiment, from the races of India, as that now raised by the proposed victims the Europeans. Than this, what could be a more fitting manner of training them for the mythical destiny of the country, "India for the Indians!" Surely the present intention cannot be to accustom us by degrees to the yoke of being tenants only of our great acquisition, but it looks very much like it. I now have to remark on the breach of pledge given by Government, that the opinions of officials and others consulted would have due consideration; in fact, in the words of the resolution, "the Governor General was to be guided by them." But it must be evident to the most obtuse that that statement was made merely to gain time, and the hope that the excitement was purely ephemeral, that it was never intended to be acted upon; and that, however much the local powers, now they see the commotion they have raised, might desire to delay the enactment, still being agged on from home to "push on the Bill at all hazards," I am pretty certain it will require stronger measures than indignation meetings, plus the best opinions, to avert what is apparently now the inevitable. Whether India would be the country she is were it not for merchants, planters, and mill-owners, in fact the whole non-official European community, does not admit of a doubt, and if this is the way we are to be rallied upon, the sooner we take into consideration the feasibility of an Anglo-Indian Republic, or take council with Australia, the better. In the meantime, we should accept the situation, by every European withdrawing his gratuitous services from an inconsiderate Government, and at once that established volunteer corps remain fast and at attention—that no more corps be raised at present, and that, pending the unconditional surrender of this Bill, let the Government depend on the apathetic native for gratuitous service until the day comes when, as has been the case before, they will cry lustily for the assistance of that new discarded lord of creation—the Englishman of energy and integrity.

Mr. A. SPICER proposed the second resolution, and said—The resolution that I have to propose is as follows:—"We regret also to observe that those persons who desire the Bill to be passed, while accusing its opponents of many things untrue in themselves which had best be passed over in silent contempt, state that we are equally opposed to Lord Ripon's general policy; more especially in the matters of Local Self-Government; and the larger introduction of Natives into the higher ranks of the service. We desire, therefore, to say that, whatever opinions individuals amongst us may have in these matters, such is not the case. We are not opposed to Self-Government or to Natives obtaining high positions in the service, so long as such is consonant with the continuance of British Rule, the equal administration of justice, and the energetic development of the resources of this great country. It seems to me that in the proposition I have just read I am merely repeating a truism, and that all that can be said on this subject has been already said. I am quite sure none of us here would wish to prevent natives of this country from obtaining such positions as their abilities and their trustworthiness may fit them for, or for managing their own local affairs. But it seems to me there are some positions for which natives of this country are unfitted, not so much on account of want of education as on account of moral fibre, and inability to free themselves from caste influences and prejudices, and the position that the passing of this Bill would give them seems to me one of them. There are other positions also in a district like this I hold them to be unfitted for, from the same reasons, such as Civil Surgeon and District Superintendent of Police, but it is waste of time to discuss this much discussed and well but unanimously condemned Bill, and I would turn for a moment to consider what we are going to do when Government passes this Bill, as pass it in some shape or other it will. Are we to sit down and see our countrymen and women in this country, or be ourselves handed over to jail, or may be the gallows, by Native Magistrates for crimes of which we are no more guilty than the unborn babe? No, better, I say, to be shot down by bullets from British rifles, if meet death or dishonour we must, than to have our characters destroyed, and our families and friends at home disgraced by connection with us. As this seems to me the certain outcome of the passing of this bill, I would earnestly ask every one present to familiarise himself with the use of a rifle, as bloodshed is inevitable if this bill be passed, for I take it as past discussion that we will not be judged in criminal matters by native magistrates, and I would ask the chairman to ask advice from the Defence Association in Calcutta as to whether they would not advise us all to join the volunteers, or whether we should merely join rifle clubs. It is an absolute necessity, if we are to do any good, that we must get trained, or train ourselves to act as a disciplined body of men. It would be a very effective reply to the passing of this bill for the Defence Association to call every non-official European and Eurasian throughout India to learn to use a rifle and bayonet, not to support the Government, but in certain eventualities to enable us to demand back again in the future the birthright that they now propose to steal from us. Do you suppose that the Barons of England would have wrung the Magna Charta from despotic and pusillanimous John if they had gone to him on bended knee and not with armed men at their back? In the same way I hold we shall have to win back our birthright from a despotic, vain, and obstinate Viceroy who will not listen to his own officials, much less to reason.

In seconding the above resolution, Mr. BELL said—Gentlemen, I feel how inadequately any argument or opinion of my own can add more weight to the exhaustive criticism that this obnoxious Bill has already called forth, from Europeans both official and non-official. The resolution I am called upon to second deprecates the assumption of the supporters of the Bill that our opposition to this Bill is only part of a systematic opposition to the whole of Lord Ripon's policy. This is distinctly reflected by the terms of the resolution. Most of the arguments for the Bill are feeble, and the reason assigned for its introduction has been proved chimerical; can it be anything but so when its acknowledged object is to put into the hands of a race, but now dimly discerning the advantages of civilisation, the power of trying a race, who are not only their conquerors, but who have for centuries been educated to believe in the impartiality of their own tribunals? Is it possible that we should be anything but suspicious of justice administered by a people, to say the least of it, so easily impressed by outside influences? Gentlemen, if we had, as becomes fair-thinking Englishmen, entertained the opinion that a native of this country, in the present state of his development, was fit by moral and social training to try us in a Criminal Court, would we have opposed a paternal Government's measure in the way we are now doing? No, we oppose the Bill from an instinctive feeling that justice cannot be expected from natives, as much as from a desire to retain for ourselves the right of being tried by our peers. When the accused has no confidence in the impartiality of his Judge, when the Judge is the man desiring the power of trying the accused, can there be any confidence in the judgment? Are our feelings on this matter to be slighted, are we to subject ourselves, or allow ourselves to be subjected, to men of a constitutional moral weakness, men wanting in the strength and sturdiness we ourselves possess? I have no need, I am sure, to answer my own questions. It is no doubt a necessity of the country that natives should be admitted to certain offices of Government, but I submit that at any rate the line should be drawn when it is proposed that the conquered should judge the conquerors, that inferiors should judge superiors, and to lower British prestige by bowing to the cries of the educated Bengali. We have quietly accepted the Local Government Bill, the measure, I believe, of which we have not yet adequately gauged the magnitude; but we have not indistinctly felt, as we have in the case of this Ilbert Bill, that it is affecting any of our rights as British born subjects; and surely, from this Lord Ripon ought to be able to gather that we do not agitate for agitation's sake, but simply from our innate knowledge of what is due to us British born subjects, inheriting a time honoured privilege, and also acting with a firm resolve of retaining that privilege.

The third resolution was proposed by Mr. A. STEWART, and on rising to do so he said—Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I will now read the resolution which I have to put for your acceptance—"We protest against the question being called a privilege of natives. It is essentially a question of the privilege of Europeans, with which natives, as such, have no concern, so long as justice is equally administered." I am sure we are all unanimous that the giving of the privilege to try European British subjects to natives is quite uncalled for, and in most cases not wanted by the natives themselves. In no way do we interfere with the many privileges preserved to them by law, and why are we to be deprived of the only one that we as Europeans possess, and which has been handed down to us by our forefathers, and which has far more reason to be allowed to remain as it is, than any held by the natives? In my experience here of over twenty years I have seen a gradually increasing friendly feeling between planter and native, the natives in many cases taking advice from the neighbouring planter, when in difficulty. But if this Bill be passed, I have no doubt that this good feeling will be entirely eradicated, and we will go back to the days when we could not move about the country without being insulted or assaulted. Messrs. Gladstone and Bright would seemingly compare the planters of to-day with the planters of fifty or sixty years ago in the West Indies, or sugar plantations of America. I am sure, if these gentlemen had a practical experience of the planter and the difficulties he had to contend with, they would not be so keen about taking from us the right we wish to retain by being tried by our own fellow countrymen. The planters of to-day, I contend, are a law abiding community, and moreover, gentlemen, willing and ready to assist Government with hand, head, and purse; but if this obnoxious Bill be passed in any form, then the Government, and they alone, will be responsible for any change in their feelings. In conclusion I consider the remarks made by Messrs. Bright and Co. an insult to all the planting community in India.

Mr. R. J. R. MACKENZIE seconded this resolution, and said—Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in seconding the resolution so ably proposed by Mr. Stewart, I would ask you to not lightly weigh the importance of the situation impending. It is with feelings of the greatest alarm, I feel sure, you must view the action Government has taken in so deliberately disregarding the expressed opinion of the whole European community of India. The feelings aroused in the breasts of all of us, by a measure so utterly uncalled for, is no paltry one. Accustomed as we have been blindly to trust our Government in a policy approved of and upheld by all, namely, that of allowing us trial by our peers, by men of our own nationality, and, therefore, acquainted with the idiosyncrasies of our race, this proposed Bill has fallen like a thunder-bolt upon us. We are surrounded by drastic formulae so complicated and numerous that it is a wonder our work progresses at all; but with this detestable Bill hanging over our heads, and our confidence in the ruling power so terribly shaken, what are we to do? Admitted as it was by the introducers of the Bill that it was looked on as of small importance, and could not have effect for years to come, seeing the way, the very mooted of the measure has roused the whole European and Eurasian community throughout this vast Empire, I take it any sane man must see the necessity for its instant withdrawal. Has justice ever failed? Has the European judge ever been known to spare the European if found guilty; or treat the native by prejudicial measures? No sir, we cannot, will not have this Bill. We will not be tried by a native. What knows he of us? That which we know of him is, I regret to say, very far from redounding to his credit.

In our cities, such as Calcutta, European barristers are available to discover the two pice witness, and bring the lying perjurer to a speedy, and well-merited punishment; but we here in the Mofussil, what are we to do? Imagine if you can a planter's wife or sister being brought before a native magistrate for trial! Would a garden throughout the whole of Cachar contain a planter, volunteer or otherwise? I pause for a reply! I consider that by this measure, as yet not passed as law, harm has been done it will take years to undo. I call upon all present should this bill, which so stinks in our nostrils, be made law, unitedly to resist its action. We must act together. Unity is strength, and, brother planters, never forget that the rights of a free born Briton are unassailable, precious to him as life, and for them he is willing to lose life, and more than that what can he? I hope in all sincerity you will approve of, and support the resolution which has been put forward.

The fourth resolution was proposed by Mr. JAMES PETER, and it reads:—"We have been greatly pained to observe that the feeling of the whole European population of India is thought of so little moment. Even at the best this Bill was looked upon by its introducers as a small matter of very little consequence that could have little result for many years to come. When it was found that it was so strongly objected to by those whom it affected, and who hitherto so loyally supported the Government in many ways, the slightest consideration might have been deemed sufficient to induce its instant withdrawal. But no consideration has been given us—we have no votes." On rising to propose the above resolution, Mr. Peter said—Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, so much has been written, and so much has been spoken at different meetings on the subject, and with such apparently poor result, that it seems as if Government were purposely shutting its ears to argument of any kind. The Bill has been attempted to be justified on various grounds, and no sooner have those been demolished by the opponents of the Bill, than other grounds have been taken up to be likewise dealt with, and yet, so far as we can judge, there is no sign of yielding. One of the grounds put forward was "anomaly." Now, gentlemen, I will ask you if it does not strike you as one, that Government, after promising to be guided by the opinion of its own officers, and which, it is needless to say, are, with few exceptions, entirely opposed to the Bill, should not immediately withdraw the Bill, but seem more bent on passing it than ever? The Chief Commissioner of Assam, in one of his late reports, says he would consider that gentleman a bad Deputy Commissioner who did not get on with his tea planters, so that, speaking more immediately of our own province, we must take into consideration from the above that not only does Mr. Elliot value our assistance, but expect his deputies to work with, consult, and secure the co-operation of us tea planters, as giving excellent results, and thus our views, if impressed upon Government in no other way, are reflected in Mr. Wright's minutes on the Bill. Under these circumstances, it is quite impossible for the Government to get away from the fact that our views have been laid before them, both officially and non-officially. There is no doubt that in April last our views were pretty strongly expressed in the meeting held here, but Government in their present mood might choose to look upon that as improper, as not having reached them through the proper official channels. However, the position is untenable after the Deputy Commissioner's able minutes on the Bill. To whom, I would ask you, is Government indebted for the conversion of the wilds of Assam into a smiling province, but to us? And I contend, and I am sure you will all agree with me, that although our position is non-official, yet the assistance one and all of us have lent towards opening up new roads and means of communication, to say nothing of many other things, entitles us not only to be consulted, but the opinions given to be regarded as that of men who have to a great extent thrown in their lot with Government for the advancement and improvement of our own particular district, but which nevertheless must be regarded as an integral part of the great Indian Empire. I would point to the great extensions in road communication which have taken place within the last ten years, and if reference were made to Government records it would be found that the cost of original work was invariably borne by the planter. This is but one of the many works done by us, but it is needless for me to refer further here to them, especially to you, who know so well. There is one point, however, to which I would refer in Mr. Wright's minutes, namely, that he thinks "It would be a graceful concession to covenanted Native Civilian to give them the powers of the Justice of the Peace on their reaching the grade of District Magistrate." I refer to this, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen, not with any view to criticise Mr. Wright's minutes, but in case it might be construed into being the views of the district. Mr. Wright admits that it would be an opportune now, but I say, and I am sure, gentlemen, you will all agree with me, that it never would be opportune, that we cannot and we will not have any compromise. A compromise is sweet as balm to the soul of a Radical, and we will have none of it. If Government has no consideration for our feelings and opinions, how can they expect our support and co-operation? The compromise of 1872 has given a handle to bringing up the present Bill, and we are now if we consent to any further compromise, only putting off the evil day; for sooner or later, if any compromise is accepted now, will the Bill be introduced again, clothed perhaps in a new robe, but going further than the present one. Mr. Luttman-Johnson, once Deputy Commissioner of the little "overflow from Sylhet," and who is prepared to go almost as far, if not further, than the "Daring Duckling," thinks that unless we are prepared to quit the country, this Bill should not be persevered with; and he does not think that that time is quite at hand yet. Surely, gentlemen, this, coming from a disciple of the advanced school, should have some weight with our present go-ahead at all prices Government. Probably at no time has it been more necessary for every European to stand to his guns and fight for that birthright which he has inherited for generations, and to tamper with which in any other but a distant portion of the realm would be more than any Government would dare, knowing well that it would mean immediate downfall to its power; the effect and memories of which would take more time to efface than even the most sanguine Radical would expect to live out. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is true we have no direct votes, but to some extent this is our own fault. Our industry is daily and yearly becoming more powerful, and tea and piece-goods are now running side by side. We are not so powerful as piece-goods yet, but the Birmingham Caucus must have had a small beginning, and why should not Mincing-lane by and bye put in an appearance? [The gross ignorance which seems to prevail regarding us and our occupation ought not to be allowed to exist any longer, and the working men in India have shown us a noble example in despatching their delegate, Mr. Atkins; and, gentlemen, if we are not able to do the same, there are many amongst us who annually go home on furlough. Let the Anglo-Indian Defence Fund furnish the "sinews of war," and I am sure none amongst us who go home would consider it a task, but rather a pleasure, to enlighten the British public as to what Government is now trying to subject us to. This would be carrying the war into the enemy's camp, and there can be no doubt that if our brethren at home knew to what an extent the protracted and uncalled for delay in dealing with this Bill has stirred up race distinction and embittered our daily relations with the Natives, not to speak of loss of prestige, the question would become a party one, and could have but one issue. Those of our brethren whose opinions favour the Bill we cannot believe, and as Mr. Keswick aptly put it, belong only to those "sailing with the prevailing wind," and it is a very noticeable feature that these opinions emanate only from the heads of departments never likely to be effected by the change, and are therefore to a great extent inadmissible. Let Government be guided by those who have a long period of service before them in this country, and there then would be but one result, the immediate withdrawal of this detested Bill.]

Dr. A. J. M. MACLAUGHLIN seconded this resolution and said—Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it was my intention to say nothing at this meeting, first because I cannot add anything to the unanswerable arguments which have been brought forward from time to time against this Bill; secondly, because no word of mine can add significance to the resolutions so ably proposed by Mr. Peter, and the importance of which you all so thoroughly appreciate; and last, but not least, because I feared I might give too free vent to my feelings, and lay myself open to the accusation of having added fuel to the fire which has now, I am sorry to see, reached the very verge of open rebellion. But gentlemen, I have changed my mind, as I do not think I would be doing my duty if I did not express my firm opinion on this most important subject. We have no votes, and consequently we have no constitutional means of opposing this reckless policy of our rulers; and those who should support us, our fellow countrymen in England, do not trouble themselves about us, and do not seem to know the nature of our grievance. They imagine, it seems, that we are objecting to the natives having equal rights with us, and to their being raised, if possible, to our standard, when what we really do object to is an attempt to deprive us of our most cherished rights, and to lower us to the standard of the native, with no real benefit to anyone, but just to gratify the sentimentality of a few Bengali Babus; and indeed, people at home, even if they tried, would find it a difficult matter to become properly acquainted with the particulars of the case, considering the systematic way they have been misinformed as regards our motives in opposing this Bill, and the feelings generally of the people with regard to it. We have fresh in our memory the false statement made by our Viceroy's mouthpiece in the House of Parliament, viz., that the consensus of official opinion in India is in favour of the Bill, opinions which we have all read, and know are with few exceptions against the Bill in its entirety, while a large majority of them is in favour of the immediate withdrawal of it. The notorious cooked telegram, and Mr. Gladstone's gratuitous remark that the spirit of ascendancy of us, who are opening up by our energy and capital the latent resources of the country, educating, civilising, and enriching the natives, and who may, if left unchecked, raise them during the lapse of another century almost to the standard of a European race—must be suppressed. Such conduct on the part of our rulers has caused us great pain, and irritated us to no small extent. It is unfortunate, too, that we, in self-defence, in our discussions on this Bill, have had to make disparaging statements about natives, which have been taken to heart the more readily because they are true and cannot be denied. All this has created in the native mind feelings of animosity to us, which, taken into consideration with our feelings just now, must put it beyond doubt that a very large amount of combustible material is being accumulated, which requires only a spark to turn it into a conflagration of enormous dimensions. It is impossible to say when the spark will fall on this combustible material if Government persists in its present suicidal policy, but it will surely do so ere long. Now that we see danger is near at hand, we should all prepare ourselves for the struggle. It does not require a prophet to see that a great danger is at hand, but that must not check us from rallying round the standard of liberty, and, like true loyal subjects, fighting for our Queen and country. Surely, matters have come to a pretty pass, and all on account of a measure which our rulers are trying to make the British public believe is a small matter of very little consequence. Is it a small matter to deprive Britons of one of their most cherished rights—a right which we have held from the time of King John, and for which our forefathers fought—a right which forms the very essence of our liberty? No, certainly not. This Bill is an infringement on our liberty. Every Briton values his liberty as he values his life, consequently it is only to be expected that we shall resist it as long as we live. However, it is to be hoped that sensible and moderate men at home will soon come to see the mistake which Government is making, and ere it is too late, and the mischief is done, come to our rescue and save us from being the victims of the cruel and merciless tyranny of John Bright, Chamberlain, and their Radical following.

This resolution was supported by Mr. Ross in a few strong and appropriate remarks.

The fifth resolution was proposed by Mr. S. D. JACKSON, and he said—The resolution which I have to propose is as follows:—"It having been thus clearly shown that the non-official European population have no constitutional influence with the Government, they have now to consider what other pressure they can bring to bear, and what course they will adopt in the event of the Bill being forced on them." Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this resolution, which I have been asked to bring forward, is at once the easiest and the most difficult to put properly to you; the easiest, because not a European in India but has been wondering for many a long day what pressure could be brought to bear on, or what arguments used with, Government to induce them to withdraw this Bill; the most difficult, because none, as far as I know, has yet solved the problem. I do not believe that anything we can say will prevent Government carrying this Bill in some form or another. The head of this bigoted Government at home has said we must be suppressed, and this Bill passed; but I do think that the very madness of the measure knells the dissolution of the fanatic party who, to please a few blatant Baboos, could throw the whole of this Empire into confusion and uproar. There are not wanting instances here in Cachar of men whose opinions have changed, and who speak of Gladstone in a very different way since the introduction of this Bill, but at home there are not wanting signs of a coming change. Honest men cannot live with some of the members of this Radical party, and before long we shall see such a man as Sir Charles Dilke leading a Conservative party, so it is already rumoured. But if this Bill should be carried through and upheld as law, what course are we to take? We have said we will not be tried criminally by natives, neither will we, come what may. Whatever course may be decided must be one and the same throughout the length and breadth of the Empire, and Europeans must act as one man, pledged to support one another, and resist even to the death this infamous attempt to abolish Magna Charta. At the present stage it is difficult to say what course should be taken. We can only await developments. Meanwhile we must be prepared for the worst, and above all things act in perfect unison.

This resolution was ably seconded by Mr. A. E. BUTLER, who spoke in firm and unmistakable language, and said in effect that, if we stood together, united and resolute, against the Bill, we must win, and gave instances of unjust laws having been repealed by sheer strength of unyielding opposition.

The sixth resolution read as follows:—"We thank those who have been so faithfully fighting our battle for us hitherto, and we would especially thank the ladies of India for their noble and touching petition to the Queen. We again thank Mr. Keswick and the Calcutta Members of the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association for all the trouble they have taken on our behalf, while our thanks are also due to Mr. W. B. Hudson and the Mozufferpore Planters for pointing us out the way we must now go."

Mr. E. C. SHOWERS, in proposing the above resolution, said—Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen, few words from me are required. Our friends referred to have done probably as much as was in their power, and apparently partly successfully to frustrate this Bill. Out in this country little remains to be done. Lord Ripon, however, seems determined to pass the Bill in some form or other, and he will. The question then remains what do we—the despised unofficial class, who, Lord Hartington says, are not responsible for the government of the country, and consequently must not be listened to—intend to do? I would propose that from each Presidency an influential deputation consisting of delegates from the different tea, indigo, and other districts where British subjects are largely employed or reside, together with the Chamber of Commerce, Tea Trade and other associations, be selected by the Committee of the E. and A. I. Defence Association, to wait on Lord Ripon as soon after his arrival in Calcutta as possible, and implore him humbly not to risk throwing the country into all the horrors of civil war. Should this heaven-born statesman, this head of a Government, who (to prove the equality of races) robs both Native and European alike, the landholders and zemindars of their land, and us of a dearly-prized privilege, the possession of which we are prepared to defend with our lives—should he, I say, refuse to listen to reason, and still persist in his mad course, then the real labours of the Defence Association will commence, as they will have to concert measures for resistance throughout India, and these, to be successful, must be organised, and united action taken. Should we be, which God forbid, compelled to take up arms in self-defence, Mr. Gladstone will find that we are not so easily to be suppressed, and Lord Ripon that we will not be contented with the simple withdrawal of the Bill, but that we shall also refuse to allow our fellow-countrymen to be tried by native magistrates even in presidency towns.

Mr. WOODROFFE seconded this resolution, and said—Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, to comment on the past and present resolutions, I fear I should be taking up a great deal of your valuable time, as many of us have long journeys to make, but in the meantime it is for us to hope and trust that Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, now Empress of India, will give her most sincere and kind consideration to the petition presented by her sister subjects, though doubtful if presented. I now have much pleasure in seconding Mr. Showers's resolution, and feel sure that, in so doing, I am expressing the wishes of all present.

Seventh Resolution:—"We pledge ourselves in the event of this Bill being passed to resist it individually and collectively by all the legal means in our power. We will not be tried by a native, nor acknowledge his jurisdiction over us, no matter what his position may be, and we shall support to the utmost any European British subject in India in this determination. We also call upon all to act likewise, even those living in the Presidency towns, where the compromise of 1872 (but which would then be compromise no longer) is now in force."

Mr. DOAKE, in proposing the above resolution, said: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is very painful for us to find ourselves placed in this position to-day, and feel that we must adopt the resolution now before the meeting. There are times in the lives of men when they greatly desire to escape by some side way from the straight path of duty that lies before them. When Charles levied his ship money, we cannot but think that Hampden, and those who acted with him, would personally have preferred to pay the tax rather than suffer in default,

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1883.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay Nov. 2; Madras and Allahabad, Oct. 31; Calcutta Oct. 30.

We learn that the Secretary of State for India has spontaneously sent for Mr. Atkins, the delegate sent home by the English working-men of India to protest against the Ilbert Bill; and that Mr. Atkins was to have the honour of an interview with his Lordship yesterday. We can only hope that this action of Lord Kimberley indicates an awakening consciousness, on the part of the Government, of the cruel effect that will be produced by the Bill on the class of Englishmen and Englishwomen whom Mr. Atkins represents; and that it is the prelude to the entire withdrawal of Lord Ripon's persecuting proposals.

LORD NORTHBROOK's announcement of the virtual surrender of the whole of the principle of the Bill, on the part of the Government, only reached us last week just as we were going to Press. We deal with the subject to-day in our leading columns. It is difficult to decide, whose convictions are most outraged, and whose arguments are most stultified, by the suggested compromise—those of the supporters or those of the opponents of the Bill. For while it surrenders all the principle and most of the details contended for by Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert—and must surely make Mr. Bright and Sir Arthur Hobhouse blush—at the same time it is ingeniously so contrived as to retain nearly all the elements of mischief of the original Bill. It has probably been evolved out of Mr. Gladstone's theory condemned for its uncharitableness by the Hindoo Patriot—that the main thing is, to check “the spirit of ascendancy” of the Anglo-Indian community. That is to say, the most obvious feature of the new Bill is, the eagerness of its authors to insult and persecute their fellow-countrymen in India, at whatever cost, and for whatever trivial consideration.

The prompt action of the Anglo-Indian Association in Calcutta, in calling a public meeting—and the fierce determination to resist the passing of the Bill to the last, which, we learn, prevails throughout India—must surely have their weight with the Government, if Mr. Gladstone and Lord Kimberley are not wholly lost to all sense of patriotism in their fear of being discredited by Lord Ripon's folly and recklessness.

The public meeting of Native and English gentlemen interested in land, which was held in the Calcutta Town-hall, on Saturday last, under the able chairmanship of Dr. Rajendralala Mitra, C.I.E., to protest against the Bengal Tenancy Bill, appears to have been a great success; and we observe that it is to be followed by a larger and more general meeting to be held in December.

We are very glad to see that both Indian and English Zemindars are now cordially pulling together, to resist the infamous act of spoliation proposed by Mr. Ilbert in this most iniquitous land-bill. At one time it seemed very likely that the fears, expressed by Lord Stanley of Alderley so aptly in the statement that this breach of the Permanent Settlement was being smuggled through “under cover of the dust raised by the Ilbert Bill,” would be fulfilled. But the speeches of Mr. Keswick (representing the great English firm of Zemindars, Messrs. Watson and Co.), and of Mr. Henry Bell, at this meeting, show that Indian gentlemen and English gentlemen will once more stand shoulder to shoulder in opposing the foolish proposals of ignorant and impracticable men, in this matter of Mr. Ilbert's Bengal Tenancy Bill.

THE resolutions passed at the meeting are characterised by great moderation, and are most skilfully drawn up; whilst they have the ring of thorough determination. They show clearly that the landholders of Bengal, long lulled into a sort of stupor by Lord Ripon's profuse expressions of benevolence and lavish promises of all sorts of Utopian blessings, have at last been thoroughly awakened to a sense of the critical state of their position—in which, as the Maharaja Sir Jotendro Mohan Tagore justly observed, their “rights, social position, nay, very means of existence” are at stake.

THE Administrative Report of the Commissioner of the Dacca Division well illustrates the utter collapse of Lord Ripon's Utopian schemes of Local Self-Government, about which so much claptrap was talked a year or so ago. As the Commissioner says, “It began in talk, and ended in talk, and now there is not even languid curiosity to know when the new scheme will be introduced.”

LORD RIPON and Mr. Ilbert have been the apostles of “talk” in India. But the worst of a régime of talk is, that some of the talk is apt to get itself translated into deeds—as in the Ilbert Bill and the Bengal Tenancy Bill—and then the idle talk becomes active mischief.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times has drawn attention prominently to the magnificent possibilities of the revival of a great land-trade between India and Central Asia, by way of Darjeeling. If the Viceroy had devoted half the energy he has expended on compiling telegrams about the Ilbert Bill, and similar works of supererogation, to such questions as the extension of this Thibetan trade, India at the present moment would have been happier and perhaps a richer country.

THE leading Native daily of Calcutta, the Indian Mirror, has, we much regret to see, some exceedingly disrespectful remarks on the English Volunteers of India. It says:—

“Should such a deplorable contingency arise, as the political severance of India from England, and the Indian races prove unable to maintain their own independence, it is certainly not the non-official European community with their force of thirty thousand holiday soldiers, who will step into the Indian Empire, but either Russia or some other European Power, with a real army, before whom our Volunteer Corps will most likely scatter themselves like a flight of birds at the mere report of a gun.”

The Indian Mirror ought to know that it is exactly such silly nonsense as this, that serves to widen the breach between the English and the Natives that has been caused by Lord Ripon's mischievous incitements to race-antagonism. Had the passage quoted above appeared in a less respectable journal, or even in the correspondence-columns of the Indian Mirror, it would have been more excusable.

SIR RICHARD CROSS's advice to the Government on the subject of the Ilbert Bill, given last night at Workington, embodies in a very few words the unanimous opinion of every person really qualified to form an opinion on the question—“Withdraw the Viceroy and withdraw the Bill.”

We shall give next week a full report of the proceedings of the meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society of Nov. 19, which we are obliged to hold over for want of space.

A REUTER's telegram, dated Bombay, Nov. 21, says:—

“The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, who arrived here at one o'clock this afternoon on board the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Cathay, have landed, and met with a cordial reception. An immense concourse of people were present on the occasion. Great festivities are preparing in honour of the visit of their Royal Highnesses. A public fair will be held to-morrow, and the day will be observed as a holiday.”

The Duke of Connaught will lay the foundation-stone of a new hospital for women and children."

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs as follows under date yesterday:—

"A vessel has arrived at Port Blair from Camorta bringing intelligence of the murder of Mr. D. Röpstorff, superintendent of the Nicobars. Mr. Röpstorff and his wife were the only Europeans on Camorta, the remainder of the population, besides the aborigines, consisting of some hundred of convicts and a havildar's guard of Madras Sepoys. The havildar, having been magisterially punished by the superintendent, lay in wait and shot him while riding with his wife. The murderer then committed suicide. Mrs. Röpstorff showed great courage. She dragged her husband's body to the house, gave the necessary orders to the Sepoy guard, and sent news of the occurrence to Port Blair. Major Protheroe, superintendent of the Andamans, proceeded immediately to Camorta."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary of the week:—Mr. Robert Carrigg, superintendent of the Madras Stable Company; Rev. Charles Edward Wheeler, of Cawnpore; Pundit Swami Dayanand Saraswati, the Indian Reformer.

WITH respect to the Tea Market, the following is from Messrs. Thomas Watson and Co.'s Tea Report:—

"At the Public Sales, held on the 24th October, out of 15,456 packages offered, 14,785 packages were sold. Prices were again irregular and lower. The advices from London continue very dull, the heavy arrivals, especially of China Tea, depressing the market generally. Regarding this the Public Ledger writes:—'The import into London during September, although reaching 31,055,048 lbs. were less than those in August, but 3½ million lbs. above the corresponding date last year, when 27,530,516 lbs. were imported; the increase is entirely confined to China. The total for the last four months shows an increase of about fourteen million lbs.' In August the landings were the greatest on record."

THE Englishman gives the following report of the Freight Market up to October 30:—

"During the past week we have not had much business put through in freights. By canal rates are considerably easier; by Cape they are unchanged, as although there is little inquiry for tonnage, vessels seem inclined to hold off the market rather than accept the current low rates offering. Unless, however, the present reports of the shortness of the jute crop are very incorrect, they have not much to look forward to, specially as our other principal items of export, grain and seeds of all sorts, seem to be exhausted or nearly so. Only three vessels have been fixed, one for New York and two for San Francisco. Our unfixed tonnage stands at 38,039 tons."

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following is the official summary of the reports of the Agricultural Department on the state of the weather and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending Oct. 23:—

"Unusually heavy rain has fallen throughout the greater part of the Madras Presidency, in Mysore, and in the southern districts of Bombay. Some damage has been done by excessive rain in parts of Madras and in the Deccan, and rabi sowings have been retarded, but standing crops have on the whole been much benefited, and promise well. Damage from excessive rain and interruption of rabi sowings are also reported from Hyderabad and the Berars. In Sind there has been no rain, and water for rabi irrigation is scarce, owing to the low level of the river. Slight showers, favourable to rabi sowings have fallen over the greater part of Central India, except Gwalior, where rain is needed. No rain fell in Rajputana, and it is much needed in Ulwar; elsewhere prospects are good. Except in Mergui, scarcely any rain has fallen in Burma during the week, and rice on highlands has suffered in parts of three districts. In Assam the weather is seasonable and crops are doing well. Rain still holds off in Bengal, and much injury has been done by the long break to the rice crop, the prospects of which are very unfavourable in all, save the eastern districts. In the Central Provinces there has been general and in parts heavy rain which has delayed agricultural operations, but prospects continue good. Moderate rain has fallen in a few districts of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, and in two districts of the Punjab, but more is needed in both provinces for the rabi. The kharif is being harvested, and winter sowings are in progress in most provinces, where they are not retarded by drought or by excessive rain. The public health is generally fair. Prices are still rising in Bengal, and are generally steady elsewhere."

MAIL NEWS.

The Salvationists "bombarded" Colombo on the 20th ult. The P. & O. s.s. Pekin, which is shortly expected, brings four more "officers" to Bombay. In Madras a large brass band is being organised "to wake up hundreds of sleeping sinners."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated Nov. 18:—

"The Council of the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association met on Thursday last and passed the following resolutions:—

"1. With reference to the announcement made by Lord Northbrook at Bristol, it is resolved that the kindred association in London be informed that the united opinion of the communities affected by the Ilbert Bill, as expressed at numerous public meetings, is opposed to the measure in any form, and protests strenuously against the vicious principles which would subject Europeans to the criminal jurisdiction of native magistrates.

"2. That a public meeting be convened to protest against the apparent determination of the Government to proceed with the Bill, in defiance and contempt of collective public opinion, and to consider and decide regarding future action; and that all classes throughout India be invited to attend."

"The European residents in the Sibsaigar district, in Assam, held a large and influential meeting on Thursday last, and adopted unanimously a series of resolutions condemning the Bill. The anxiety shown by the Europeans of Assam on the subject of the Ilbert Bill does not appear unnatural when we recollect the fact mentioned by Mr. Muspratt, Judge of Sylhet, in his report—namely, that 2,436 false cases were detected in Assam in 1880, and 2,185 in 1881; or, in other words, that nearly 10 per cent. of the charges brought were rejected.

"The zemindars seem to be at last shaking off their extraordinary apathy on the subject of the Rent Bill. A largely-attended meeting of native and European gentlemen interested in land was held in the Calcutta Town-hall yesterday, Dr. Rajendra-Lala Mitter presiding. The following resolutions were carried:—

"1. That a committee submit a memorial to the Viceroy in Council with reference to the official opinions on the Bengal Tenancy Bill.

"2. That a memorial be submitted to the Secretary of State, with reference to the despatch of the Indian Government upon which his sanction to the Bill was accorded, praying that he will direct that no further proceedings in the matter be taken, until he has had an opportunity of reconsidering his decision with reference to the facts stated in the memorial; and, further, that a memorial be addressed to the Viceroy praying for a postponement of the Bill till the Secretary of State's orders on the above representation shall have been received.

"3. That it be respectfully brought to the notice of the Government that the Bill will seriously depreciate the value of the property of the zemindars, and will consequently reduce their means of maintaining or contributing to the support of institutions and objects of public utility.

"4. That arrangements be made for a general meeting in Calcutta of the zemindars of Bengal and Behar during December for further discussion of the steps to be taken in the matter of the Bill."

"Among the speakers were Maharajah Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore, Maharajah Narendra Krishna, Baboo Joykissen Mookerjee, Mr. Keswick (representing the great landholding firm of Watson and Co.), Mr. C. P. Hill, a zemindar of the Sunderbunds, and Mr. Henry Bell, late Legal Remembrancer to the Government.

"The annual administrative report of the Commissioner of the Dacca Division furnishes some further evidence regarding native feeling with reference to the topics of the day. The only district, he says, in which interest is displayed in the Rent Bill is Mymensing, where the hopes of the ryots are extravagant, and the anticipations of the zemindars unduly gloomy. Interest in the Ilbert Bill is said to exist only in the larger towns. Regarding local self-government, he states that the enthusiasm has died out. It began to talk, and ended in talk, and now there is not even languid curiosity to know when the new scheme will be introduced. On the subject of the Press, he states that the newspapers of Mymensing have been infected with a growing estrangement from and bitterness towards Europeans, and that this feeling has developed itself out of the Criminal Procedure Bill.

"The harvest prospects in Bengal continue to be gloomy. The last official report describes the general outlook in the province as serious, save in the eastern and north-eastern districts. The rice on the high lands has mostly been destroyed, while that on the low lands has suffered more or less. It is now too late to hope for anything except a very deficient return from the winter crops, but some rain would still do good by facilitating sowing. Prices have risen throughout the province. There are apparently good stocks in hand, but probably relief works will be required in some districts.

"The Akhas tribe on the Assam frontier is reported to have made a raid on Baliparahat, eighteen miles north of Tezapore, and to have carried off the forest ranger and his clerk. A party of police is preparing to start in pursuit.

"During a recent visit to Darjeeling I was much impressed by the great advance in the prosperity of the station and district since they were brought into connection with the Indian Railway system, visible two years ago. The advance already made, however, seems but an earnest of a still more prosperous future. I do not so much refer to the prospects of Darjeeling as a health or pleasure resort as to the chance of it becoming, at no distant date, the centre of an important trans frontier trade."

"Within a few days' march of the terminus of the mountain railway lines is the richest and most populous part of Tibet, inhabited, not like the trans-frontier districts of the Punjab, by Mahomedan cut-throats, but by a peaceable and trade-loving people. At present the bulk of the trade between India and Tibet is obliged to follow a most circuitous route, through Nepal, and it is charged duty on entering and leaving that country. Notwithstanding these difficulties, the trade continues to increase. The direct route lies unquestionably through Darjeeling, and goods can now be conveyed by rail to within a week's journey from the frontier. The removal of the existing restrictions would open new and enormous markets for tea, indigo, tobacco, and other Indian products, as well as for hardware and the cotton goods of Manchester. This market would supply us in return with inexhaustible quantities of the finest wool, and with musk, borax, &c.

"There is abundant evidence that both rulers and people would welcome the opening of trade, in spite of the difficulties raised by the Chinese authorities. An occasional Tibetan trader even now manages to find his way to Darjeeling. The Llama at Shigatze is now a child; but his Prime Minister is said to be a most intelligent man, a great admirer of the English, and most anxious to establish friendly relations with them. The other day he sent to Darjeeling for a supply of English books, photographic, and other scientific instruments. It is clear that he would welcome the removal of the present difficulties. That these difficulties continue to exist is due mainly to the supineness of the English Government, which neglects to use the right, acquired under the Chefoo Convention, of sending Residents to Tibet. Such Residents would be received by the Tibetans as cordially as were the emissaries sent by Warren Hastings a century ago. The British Minister at Peking would probably find little difficulty in persuading the Chinese Government to issue such an order to its Ampas, or Residents, at Lhasa as would put an end to the obstacles which now meet traders at the frontier. The subject seems well worthy the attention of the Chambers of Commerce at the manufacturing centres at home. A little judicious pressure brought by them to bear upon the Government would probably have the result of opening to British commerce a country which has been a sealed book to Europeans for over 100 years.

"From a report published in the Official Gazette, it appears that the total number of persons killed by wild animals and snakes in India last year was 22,125, against 21,427 in the previous year, and of cattle 46,707, against 44,669. Of the human beings destroyed, 2,606 were killed by wild animals, and 19,519 by snakes. Of the deaths occasioned by the attacks of wild animals, 805 were caused by tigers, 278 by wolves, 207 by leopards, 359 by jackals, and 202 by alligators; 18,591 wild animals and 322,421 snakes were destroyed, for which the Government paid rewards amounting to 1,41,653 rupees.

"A merchant just returned from Cabul furnishes the following items of news to the Civil and Military Gazette:—"The Ameer has executed a number of persons suspected of favouring the cause of Ayoub Khan, and has also expelled a large number from his territories. Many of the Ameer Sheer Ali's servants have been sent to Peshawur. The Persian Envoy having recovered from his illness, has left for Meshed, having failed, it is said, to secure the object of his mission. The Russian merchants who were in Turkestan have made purchases and left the country. The Russian survey expedition which visited the borders of Badakshan has finished its work and recrossed the Oxus. The ruler of Candahar has written to the Ameer for additional troops and money. The Ameer has built himself a new palace at Cabul."

THE same correspondent telegraphs as follows:—

"CALCUTTA, Nov. 19.—The Englishman publishes the following telegram from Balipara:—"Akhas raids are causing great uneasiness in the district. The Akhas in the surrounding jungle are receiving supplies from the villagers. A planter, resident eight miles from Balipara, reports that Akhas have appeared there, and he writes for arms and police to be sent. Ten police have gone to his assistance, leaving eighteen to hold the outpost. There are no officials at present on the spot, and the planters are taking measures to defend their gardens."

A REUTER'S telegram, dated Calcutta, Nov. 17, states:—

"A large and influential meeting of zemindars has been held at the Town Hall to protest against the Bengal Rent Bill. It was resolved to send a memorial to the Viceroy and the Secretary of State for India. Much excitement prevails among the landed proprietors on this subject."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

GEMS OF CHINESE LITERATURE.*

EVERY writer interested in China finds it a heavy task to impart any fraction of that interest to the dwellers in Europe. A war with China raises for a time a languid curiosity; but, as everybody makes up his mind beforehand that the Chinese are sure to be beaten, the real interest begotten of uncertainty is not awakened even in that case. No one, however, can become even partially acquainted with the Chinese without being amazed at this apathy; for their history, literature, polity, trade, manufactures, customs, and ideas, present a series of topics addressing themselves strongly to the sympathies of Western nations. Many reasons have been suggested for this want of attractiveness in Chinese affairs; but it seems to us that the real reason is to be found in the even excellence of all that the Celestials do, or have done. Europeans can sympathise with the benighted savage; they can feel an odd curiosity in the skin dresses and rude ornaments of the uncivilised; they can puzzle their minds for years over absurdities in the extravagant mythologies of the heathen; but they find it impossible to take interest in a people not so far beneath them as to be the objects of pity, nor so far above them as to be the objects of wonder. The misfortune of China, then, seems to be that she is always at her level best.

This fact is well illustrated in the book before us. Mr. Giles has selected passages from Chinese literature which well deserve to be classed as gems; and had only a few of them been met with in savage traditions, they would have aroused the admiration of Europe. We find the whole of them clear and straightforward in their statements, and full of good sense and practical wisdom; indeed, they are marvellously like the best kind of Western writing. Each topic is treated much in the way in which we ourselves would treat it, or expect to find it treated by a polished and polite people. The inference is that for thousands of years the Chinese have been intellectually, morally, and socially, on the level to which we have recently attained. Now people read foreign literature to find something different from what they have been accustomed to at home, not to find the stranger thinking and acting much as we should have thought and acted under similar circumstances.

We can, however, confidently recommend Mr. Giles's little book to all those who have any wish to ascertain what sort of people the Chinese really are. We are afraid that it will take the conceit out of those who fancy that Europeans are vastly superior to the inhabitants of the Middle Kingdom. The defect of the Chinese has hitherto been simply their exclusiveness. Highly intellectual themselves, and being surrounded by the sea on one side and nations far beneath themselves on the other, they have had their minds turned inwards, and have necessarily come to regard themselves with a large amount of complacency. The events of the last half century have taught them that there are things worth knowing, of which they were perfectly ignorant; and they are not the people to neglect the warnings they have received. Those who deal with them in the future will have to learn that the Chinese are a progressive people, that they profit by experience, and that each attempt to deal with them in a high-handed manner will become increasingly difficult. The French may rely upon it that they will not "walk over the course" as the English did forty years ago.

The selections in Mr. Giles's book cover a period extending from B.C. 550 to A.D. 1650, and treat on a great variety of subjects. One anecdote is well worth quoting; for, although written in the eighth century, it is singularly applicable to our own country at the present time, or to any other time when reform runs mad. A gardener is asked why his trees thrive while those of others are sickly; and he replies that it has become the custom for gardeners to worry their plants by too much attention and amendment, whereas he simply plants his properly, in good mould, and leaves them to develop naturally. He then applies his answer to the Government of the country, by adding:—"In the village where I live, the officials are for ever issuing all kinds of orders, as if greatly compassionating the people, though really to their utter injury. Morning and night the underlings come round and say, 'His Honour bids us urge on your ploughing, hasten your planting, and superintend your harvest. Do not delay with your spinning and weaving. Take care of your children. Rear poultry and pigs. Come together when the drum beats. Be ready at the sound of the rattle. Thus we poor people are badgered from morn till eve. We have not a moment to ourselves. How could anyone flourish and develop under such conditions? It is this that brought about my illness. And so it is with those who carry on the gardening business.'"

A better satire on the present pottering legislation cannot easily be penned. We would advise Mr. Giles to omit, in any reprint of his book, the note on p. 171, relative to India. The authority there cited on the subject is not worth a straw, and the remark itself is worth about as much as the authority.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BENGAL ENANCY BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I was extremely sorry to have been prevented from attending the meeting held at the East India Association, on the 1st inst., as I take a great interest in the question which was then discussed. The able and exhaustive lecture read by Mr. Lethbridge, which I have since perused with great satisfaction, has left nothing unexplained, and I have no desire to add any further arguments or remarks on the general subject.

But there is one point on which I am anxious to offer a few remarks, not only because I consider it of vast importance, but also because peculiar circumstances during my long career in India have afforded me exceptional opportunities of forming a sound opinion on it.

The subject to which I specially refer, is the condition of the peasantry of Behar, and the general character of the larger landholders of that Province, especially as regards their relations with the ryots.

During a service of twenty-five years, I had frequent opportunities of observing the general character of these relations, especially in the Province of Outtaok, where, when yet a youth, I was employed in the re-settlement of the Province; but it was from the year 1850 to 1867, that I enjoyed special and altogether unusual means of maturing my former sentiments, and ascertaining with greater accuracy the real condition of the agricultural population, and the character of the leading Rajahs and Landlords.

For five years I was Judge of Shahabad, one of the leading districts of the Patna Province, and was in constant communication with both landlords and cultivators, not only through the vast number of cases which it fell to my lot to decide, but also from various other extra official opportunities, when I endeavoured, in conjunction with the leading Zemindars, to organise schools, dispensaries, and other important measures connected with popular education.

The result of this lengthened experience and observation, was, and still is, that, making all allowance for occasional disputes, isolated instances of oppression, violence, or wrong, the general relation of the two parties was one of mutual harmony and reasonable concord, brought about by the obvious fact that their interests were, in all important points, the same.

In 1855 I was promoted to the commissionership of Patna when the same familiar communication was kept up with the leading landholders, not of one district only, but of the entire province.

Throughout the whole of these several periods my observations were carefully extended in the same direction, and invariably with the same result.

But my experience did not end even here.

In 1857 I entered on a new career, and obtaining a diploma from the High Court (which enabled me to plead throughout India) established a general Law Agency.

This sudden change of position, I need hardly say, effected a corresponding change in my relations, and led, after a very short time, to an unreserved and intimate communication with the leading landholders of the several districts, among whom I may specially mention the Rajahs of Darbhunga, Bettiah, Hutwa, Doomraon, the celebrated Baboo Koer Singh, who was subsequently driven into rebellion by the infatuation of the Government, Syad Wilayat Ali Khan, Nujsem-ood-deem, and many others of the higher class, both Mahomedan and Hindoo.

Cases and suits of every description were incessantly brought before me for professional aid, all restraint was removed from our communications, and there was hardly any case of violence, abuse, oppression, or ill-treatment, which did not come under my cognisance, untrammelled by officialism, or the intervention of interested subordinates.

I can now say conscientiously and truly, that the general result of my inquiries and investigation as a Law agent was precisely what it had been during my earlier days as an official, whether Assistant, Collector, Magistrate, or Commissioner, viz., that making due allowance for the infirmity of human nature, the intervention of disputes, and occasional tyranny, the condition of the tenantry generally, was, as far as the landlords were concerned, one of contentment, good feeling, and cordiality.

As regards the general claims of the higher classes—I cannot conclude these remarks without pointing to the admirable behaviour and special services so nobly rendered by all of them, by the noble and magnificent assistance they afforded me in each and all of the schemes which I organised, and the intelligent interest which in all of those undertakings, they invariably exhibited—while their conduct during the Mutiny, when the province was trembling in the balance, is beyond all praise.

Patna, indeed, owes to a great extent its preservation to the noble and patriotic action of several independent landholders, and more especially of Syad Wilayat Ali Khan, who has since, after years of defamation, been twice honoured by Her Majesty, and now rejoices in the title of Nawab—a man of high family, who sacrificed everything to his ardent and unflinching loyalty.

I do not for a moment doubt that those who have originated the Bill under discussion, have done so with the benevolent idea of protecting the cultivators from oppression, but I am under the strongest conviction that the motives which have led to its introduction, are based on mistaken assumptions not unreasonable in themselves, but in the present instance altogether unfounded.

I feel, therefore, strongly convinced that the Radical change which the Bill will introduce, while unjust in itself, will be fraught with future mischief.—I am, yours faithfully,

WILLIAM TAYLER, Late Commissioner of Patna.

THE STRANGERS' HOME FOR ASIATICS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—From the last annual report of the Strangers' Home for Asiatics, Africans, and South Sea Islanders, it appears that its supporters are mainly resident in England; yet I cannot but feel that this excellent institution merits the warm sympathy and active support of both European and native communities throughout our Eastern Empire.

There are doubtless very many in India who are unaware of the existence of the "Home," or at all events of the real nature and extent of its work, which, if known, would induce them to become supporters of this admirable national institution.

In the hope then of inducing my fellow-countrymen, and the native princes and merchants, in India, to take an interest in the work, and to recognise the claims of this great charity, I venture to solicit that you will do me the favour to publish the following observations:—

The "Strangers' Home" was established in the year 1856, and is located in a spacious and suitable range of building in the West India Dock-road, Limehouse, London. His Highness the Maharajah Dhulip Singh, G.C.S.I., was amongst the original contributors to a large amount, and he has since given several very handsome donations to it, as have also the Rajah of Cochin, and others, but for some years past H.H. the Maharajah of Travancore has been the only regular contributor from among the Native Princes of India.

The "Home" offers to every class of Orientals, Africans, and Polynesians, who come to England, comfortable and respectable lodgings and food at a cost which renders the Institution in a measure self-supporting. The inmates are allowed to deposit great their money and other property in safe custody; remittances are made on their behalf to their families and friends; they are afforded such advice and information as they may require; they are protected from imposition; and employment on board ship is secured for those not under contract who wish to work their way back to their homes; nor are there wanting excellent opportunities for religious instruction to those who are willing to be taught the truths of the Gospel.

But there are rates, taxes, insurance, establishment, and petty expenses to be paid, besides which many destitute cases are provided for gratuitously in the "Home," and many outstay the time which their means enable them to pay for. It is to meet such outlay that the help of the public is needed in support of the institution.

Nearly 8,000 strangers (of whom about 1,750 were destitute), natives of India, China, the Malay Peninsula, Africa, and the South Sea Islands, have been admitted into the "Home" since its foundation, and from individuals amongst these there has been received in the course of twenty-five years, for safe custody during the sojourn, cash to the aggregate value of about £26,000, besides a large amount in watches, chains, and other property. But for the intervention of the authorities at the "Home," great part of the sums and property thus deposited would have fallen into the hands of crimps and harpies, ever on the look out to plunder Asiatics and other foreigners on their arrival.

It is satisfactory to note that there is a progressive advance annually made in the numbers admitted into the "Home." Thus in 1880 there were 601 cases in all, being thirty-one in excess of the number in any previous year, and the number of depositors has also increased. The widening field of operations and the certainty that the benefits conferred affect not only the social, industrial, and financial well-being of increasing numbers, but also their moral and spiritual prosperity, strengthen the claims of the Institution for increased support from the public, especially from all connected with India.

Illustrative of the benefits of the "Home," and as showing the services rendered to its inmates, I give a brief outline of a few cases.

1. A crew of Lascars just arrived at the docks, who had drawn a portion of their wages, were enticed into the house of a Chinese crimp, and some of their number detained, their ship in the meanwhile having sailed for Glasgow. It was evidently the intention of the crimp, having plundered them of all they brought on shore, to try and ship them in another vessel, drawing and appropriating the bulk of their advance wages. Through the intervention of the officials at the Home, these men were discovered and rescued, and sent to join their ship at Glasgow, and returned in her to India. Had they missed the ship, they would have lost all the clothes they left on board, as well as the balance of their wages; and this is one only of similar cases.

2. A native gentleman, engaged as a medical student, was passing through London on the eve of embarkation for India, when he was robbed and left penniless and friendless. Directed to the Strangers' Home, he sought and obtained admittance. During two months' residence there his case was inquired into, his friends communicated with, remittances received from them, and he was sent back to India.

3. A respectable young native, coming to England on some commercial enterprise, was robbed of his all on the eve of embarkation at Bombay, and arrived in this country penniless and friendless. Admitted to the Home, his friends in India were communicated with, and funds have been received, though not as yet sufficient to clear him of all debt to the "Home," where he still remains, but is expecting soon to receive a remittance in full.

4. Some months ago a young Seikh Sowar cut his name from a Bengal Cavalry Regiment, in the belief that a contingent of native troops was employed in the Mediterranean, under the command of Maharajah Dhulip Singh, and he conceived the idea of coming to Europe to serve under the Maharajah of his own native land. The trooper paid his own passage from Calcutta to Malta, and on arrival there, discovering the mistake, he came on to England in the hope of paying his respects to the Maharajah. Reaching this country in a helpless and friendless condition, he was received into the "Home," and arrangements made to facilitate his return to India.

Such are examples of cases in which admission to the "Home" has saved Asiatics, and others from Turkey, Egypt, and the coast of Africa, from much suffering and inevitable ruin. Before closing these observations, it may not be out of place if I offer some account of my first visit to the "Strangers' Home," a visit which led me to feel the interest I now take in the institution.

Landing from a Thames river steamer at the Limehouse Pier, five minutes' walk brought me to the "Strangers' Home," when, though an unknown visitor, I was courteously received by the superintendent, Mr. Freeman, and allowed to inspect the whole premises. Entering the large hall I found a group of Asiatics of various nationalities comfortably seated round a blazing fire, all smoking and talking. Passing on to the office, I noticed several Lascars engaging themselves to captains of ships for employment on the voyage to India, and in the next room were shelves of religious and other books for the use of the inmates who could read. In the dining hall I saw two or three groups enjoying their midday meal, and partaking of savoury curries that only Asiatics can make. In the kitchen were boilers, and ovens, and an ample supply of cooking apparatus, and the men employed as cooks were such that no religious prejudices were offended. In the lavatories there are hot and cold baths, and arrangements to enable every man to wash his own clothes, while each paying inmate is entitled to have seven pieces washed for him weekly. Ascending to the dormitories I found them all clean and well ventilated, with a supply of warm bedding for every cot, and there were separate sleeping compartments for those who were disposed to pay for the same. Cleanliness, order, and regularity were apparent throughout the whole establishment. I conversed freely with many of the inmates, among others with the Seikh Sowar, and all expressed themselves as thoroughly contented, and all spoke with gratitude of the kindness and attention of the superintendent and other officials.

In conclusion I may appropriately invite attention to the Scriptural injunction inscribed as the motto of the Home. "Be not forgetful to entertain Strangers."—Your obedient servant,

EDWARD PASKE,

Colonel, Retired List, Bengal Staff Corps.

Guildford, Nov. 7, 1881.

P.S.—I have ascertained from the Hon. Secretary that donations and subscriptions may be paid to Barclay, Bevan, and Co., 54, Lombard-street, or to J. H. Fergusson, Esq., at the Strangers' Home, Limehouse, London, E. And by those who would prefer making payments in India, any sums can be paid to the branches of the Agra Bank, at Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Kurrachee, Lahore, and Agra, which bank will account for the same to the Hon. Secretary in this country.

THE ILBERT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—May I be permitted to make one or two observations upon that portion of Lord Northbrook's speech at Bristol which refers to certain charges made by me against the Government of India in connection with the Libert Bill?

It appears to me, however, that Lord Northbrook's admissions are at least as remarkable as his attempted contradictions. He admits that the Bill was sent home by Lord Ripon, accompanied by a number of opinions from local Governments, which had no real connection with it. These opinions were certainly used in England by the supporters of the Bill to convey the impression to the public that the Bill had received the approval of those Governments, and even in the debate in the Calcutta Council they were, I believe, referred to by at least one official speaker as if they recommended the Bill.

Lord Northbrook admits that the Government of India sent home the telegraphic summary (No. 1) of the debate in the Indian Council, which everyone knows to have been inaccurate.

As regards the now famous telegram (No. 3) of Sept. 7, giving a summary of the opinions of the local Governments, my statement was that it was clear that it could only have been derived by Reuter's Agency from official sources at Simla. Lord Northbrook's answer amounts to this. The Government of India supplied a copy of the official papers in advance to a selected representative of the Press, and then allowed him to send home a wholly inaccurate summary, in order to influence public opinion in England.

There remains the answer given in the House of Commons as to the official replies from the various local Governments. Until I read Lord Northbrook's speech I was under the belief that the answer was founded upon a telegram received from the Government of India, for which the India Office had been constantly pressed to ask. It now appears that Lord Ripon sent home no telegram on the subject, but that the misleading answer to which I referred, and which Lord Northbrook himself admits to be inaccurate, was only founded upon "information of various kinds which had reached the India Office"—surely an odd way of furnishing a plain answer to a plain question. But in attributing any telegram to Lord Ripon on this point I was clearly in error, and I at once withdraw a statement which was made only under misapprehension, but which I none the less regret.

As to Lord Northbrook's suggestion that I should not have ventured to make such charges in the House of Commons, I hasten to protest against the notion that any member of Parliament is less responsible for the accuracy of his extra-Parliamentary utterances than for his statements in the House of Commons. For my part, I have never made any statement outside the House which I should not be prepared to repeat within it. But in all probability the next opportunity which the Government will give us of discussing any questions connected with India will be at the end of August, 1884.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

SPRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE MATERIAL CONDITION OF THE PEASANTRY OF BENGAL.

[FROM THE "HINDOO PATRIOT."]

THE only plausible excuse which we have seen made for a wholesale change of the land-laws of Bengal is the depressed condition of the peasantry. But what is the real condition of the peasantry of Bengal? On this point the appendix to the last memorial of the British Indian Association contains the most irrefragable evidence. We have not space for the whole of the extracts, but we will cull a few here and there for the satisfaction of the reader:—

DACCA DIVISION.

(Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, September 20, 1876.)

The material condition of the people is reported to be one of steady improvement. Mr. Lyall, the magistrate of Dacca, writes:—"The condition of the ryots is excellent; they pay low wages, and are getting high prices for rice as well as for their other crops; very nearly the whole of the benefit of the rise in price caused by the famine year is enjoyed by them, and the ryots of this part of Bengal are decidedly prosperous." In Furreedpore the people are not quite so well off as they are in Dacca. In Backergunj many of the ryots are said to be in debt, but "that they are so," writes Mr. Peacock, the commissioner, "entirely their own fault; with a soil of such wonderful fertility that it is by no means unusual for a single acre of land, just touched by the ploughshare, to yield thirty maunds of paddy, with a system of rivers and khals and channels that enable them either to sell the produce of their land to traders within a few yards of where it is grown, or to transport it themselves to the nearest market, and lastly, living in a district which by reason of its wonderful water system, is almost independent of the rainfall, and where, consequently, a failure of crops is almost an impossibility, and a bad harvest of the rarest occurrence; the ryot of Backergunj, if he is not well to do, has only himself to thank." The Lieutenant Governor, however, trusts that in fact the indebtedness of the Backergunj peasantry is not so widespread as is stated; no doubt the system of advances is common, but it is believed that the debts incurred are rapidly paid off, and that the ryots, as a community, are far less involved in Backergunj than they are in less favoured districts nearer Calcutta. In Tipperah it is certain that the people are very well off.

BHAGULPORE DIVISION.

(Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, September 20, 1877.)

Fine crops at home and high prices abroad made the year a prosperous one for the cultivators. The commissioners write:—"The people are advancing, though slowly, in intelligence and wealth, they look happy and contented. Marriages are numerous, and fairs and religious festivals well attended. Coolies cannot be as easily obtained as formerly, and the prices of labour are supposed to be going up." In Purneah the trade in jute and oil-seeds has added largely to the ryots' means, while Malda has especially benefited, though it is to be feared only temporarily, by the higher prices of silk-cocoons.

BURDWAN DIVISION.

(Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, November 28, 1877.)

To the cultivators generally the year was one of remarkable prosperity. The full crops attended with high prices owing to the scarcity in Madras, enabled them to pay off most of their debts and to satisfy the demands of their landlords. In Burdwan the grain advances made during the famine of 1874, amounting to Rs.2,35,000, have been all repaid save Rs.10,000. Even in the tracts which suffered from inundation the ryots made such profits from mulberry as almost made up for any losses on rice.

RAJSHAHYE DIVISION.

(Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, September 19, 1877.)

The reports of the district officers confirm the fact already noticed by the Lieutenant Governor, that a marked amelioration in the material condition of the people is to be observed in most of the districts of Bengal. The effects of the famine have, in this division, already passed away. Good harvests and high prices have enabled the ryots to pay up their arrears of rent, of famine advances, and the only fear now is that the improved condition of the peasantry, and their consequent independence, may make them act unfairly towards their landlords.

DACCA DIVISION.

(Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, September 26, 1877.)

Generally, Mr. Peacock holds, there can be no doubt that the material condition of the agricultural portion of the population is one of great and increasing prosperity, and, as a consequence, of rapidly advancing independence. The growth of the jute cultivation is assigned as the chief cause of this. The magistrate of Dacca states that the amount of jute grows in that district alone and sold at Narayangunj, put a sum into the ryots' hands enough to pay the whole rental of the district, and leave a surplus over of 8 to 13 lacs. A similar state of things is found in Furreedpore, Mymensing, and Tipperah. "The style of living of the peasantry has quite changed. They are well housed, well fed, and well clothed; their women and children wear ornaments; their utensils are of metal instead of, as formerly, earthenware; they sleep on platforms instead of mats, and are covered with quilts well stuffed with cotton in place of the rags of cloth that in former years sufficed for the purpose." It is said that the professional and petty trading classes have not shared in this prosperity, and felt the higher prices of necessaries. They will probably, however, be able in time to raise the rate of their own remuneration.

PRESIDENCY DIVISION.

The magistrates of 24-Pergunnahs, Nuddea, and Jessore concur in testifying to a general improvement in the material condition of the lower classes. Mr. Smith, who has had long experience of Jessore, declares that he sees a gradual and steady improvement. "The peasantry are now better fed, better clothed and better housed than they were ten years ago. Almost every ryot now bears a cloth umbrella and a carpet bag—articles which were formerly considered as luxuries for people in the higher grades of life." Mr. Stevens, of Nuddea, thinks that, while the lower classes are improving, the overstocking of the professions and of Government service has affected injuriously the status of the better classes, and believes that in many families there is really a struggle for subsistence. The Lieutenant Governor fears that there is much truth in this. The undue attention paid to the teaching of very bad English in our middle class schools, and the natural tendencies of all Bengalees of the writer and higher classes to despise manual labour, have no doubt tended to create a large class of discontented, half-educated men who cannot find word, but are not, as Mr. Stevens says, ashamed to beg from their wealthier relatives. The evil must to a great extent work its own cure. As the idlers increase, they will eventually be driven to work; and the difficulty of finding work may in time have the effect of postponing marriage and effecting other great social reforms. There are symptoms that the time is approaching when these classes will take to mechanical pursuits. Any disposition of this sort will be encouraged by Government, and when a real demand exists for teaching of a practical kind, it will be given.

BURDWAN DIVISION.

(Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, October 2, 1878.)

The material condition of the people was good. The outturn of the crop was fair, and this, added to the large harvest of 1876-77, enabled the agriculturists to profit to the full by the high prices that ruled owing to the great demand for export to Madras and Bombay. In most of the districts the labouring classes were able also to share in the prosperity and secure a rise in wages.

CHITTAGONG DIVISION.

(Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, October 2, 1878.)

It was remarked in the resolution on last year's report that the fact of the people having tided over the distress following on the cyclone, without any assistance from Government, was of itself striking evidence of their generally prosperous condition. In the tracts actually devastated by the cyclone, there was some decrease in cultivation owing to the difficulty of obtaining seed grain, and partly also from the idea that the salt-water has destroyed the fertility of the soil. The high prices of food must have pressed severely on the lower classes, but the cultivators in general have made few complaints. There have also been some complaints of the pressure of recent taxation—the Road Cess, Public Works Cess, and License Tax, all having come into operation in Chittagong about the same time; but the grumbling appears to have proceeded for the most part from the zemindars. Great difficulty has been experienced in getting labourers for road and embankment works, while there has been only a slight falling off in the institution of criminal charges, which is the favourite, though somewhat costly amusement of the Chittagong ryot. On the whole, there is no reason to believe that the material condition of the people in the greater part of the district was worse than in other parts of Bengal. No doubt the people suffered from the effects of high prices the more because Chittagong is an importing district. In the part affected by the cyclone there was certainly much distress felt. But after another good harvest, the condition of the district will, it may be hoped, be entirely satisfactory.

DACCA DIVISION.

(Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, September 25, 1878.)

The year was to the cultivating classes, who in Eastern Bengal form the bulk of the people, a season of extraordinary prosperity. They had good crops both of rice and jute, and realised extremely high prices. The non-agricultural classes and the small landlords may have suffered to some extent (for with the rise in the price of rice all other articles of food went up), but the fact that they have been able to stand such a dear market so long, proves that they too are not without resources. The enormous amount of money which has been poured into the country for the purchase of grain must indeed have percolated through nearly all grades of society in one way or other. The district of Furreedpore was perhaps the worst off, the crop there having been rather short, but even here the collector describes the people as fairly prosperous, well clothed and well housed. The Mahomedan sub-divisional officer at Kishoregunge points to the improved houses, better clothes, and richer jewellery, but especially the greater number of wives of the peasantry, as incontestible proofs of their material well-being. In Dukhin Shabazpore, devastated as it was by the cyclone and storm-wave, the people were able to support themselves by the sale of their ornaments until the crop was ripe; and from the time that the early rice began to be out in August, 1877, they continued steadily to improve. Mr. Gupta, the assistant magistrate in charge of Perozapore, himself a native of Bengal, shows that, but for his recklessness and prodigality in times of plenty, the Backergunj ryot would be even better off than he is. In proof of this he refers to the increase in the number of fairs held in the ryots' idle season between January and May. "At these fairs," he says, "everything that can be wanted, either as a necessity or a luxury, can be found, from earthen pots to Keating's Cough Lozenges. The ryots spend a lot of money on useless things, instead of laying it up for a rainy day; but in spite of this and similar extravagances, it is clear they have laid by enough to keep them for some months, after the great calamity of 1876, and I do not know that much more can be expected. They live in great comfort, in homesteads, of 5 to 4-Bigas, surrounded by a moat and ridge, the only approach to which is a raised road leading to the river, lined on both sides by cocoanut, date, and other fruit trees; they have an outer house where the ryot transacts his business, receive visitors, and puts up his guests for the night, and as many inner houses as the wants of his family require; the whole being surrounded by a thick plantation of betel and cocoanut trees, which not only gives seclusion, but is also a source of great profit, so much so that many families support themselves on the produce of their homestead gardens."

PRESIDENCY DIVISION.

(Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, October 2, 1878)

The year was one of progress and increased prosperity, especially in regard to the lower classes, whether ryots or artisans. The latter are able apparently in districts near the Presidency to share in the growing prosperity and gains of the former. The best proof of the generally improved condition of all classes is, as Mr. Peacock remarks, the way in which they have stood the high prices of the past year—prices actually higher than those assumed in 1874, as famine rates. Moorshedabad is, perhaps, the most backward district in the division, but even here as elsewhere, the ryot is in a much more independent and well-to-do condition than could have been hoped for twenty years ago. He is everywhere, however reckless and improvident, ready to sell off all his grains while prices are high, and to squander the proceeds, and never getting out of debt to his Mahajun and zemindar. There is a general agreement among the district officers as the depressed condition of the middle classes on moderate incomes. "Too proud," writes one officer, "to soil their respectable hands with manual labour, but not too proud to live a life of dependence on others, their field of occupation remains limited in extent while their numbers increase. What their future will be it is difficult to foresee; but even now their existence is so precarious that they feel the pressure of high prices of food more than their humble, but more useful, brethren." The Commissioner hopes that these classes are beginning themselves to recognise their own position, and to turn their attention to trades and other means of earning a livelihood opposite to their traditions of caste and family.

PATNA DIVISION.

(Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, October 27, 1882.)

Under this head the Commissioner gives, on the whole, a fairly satisfactory account. The experienced collector of Mozufferpore, Mr. Worseley, considers that the material condition of the people improved visibly during the year, and he appeals to the number and character of weddings and the comparatively well-fed appearance of the lower classes in support of this statement. The Commissioner is doubtful how far these circumstances can be taken as evidence of permanent improvement in the condition of the classes referred to, but they at all events indicate some present advance; and if fixity of tenure and fair rents will give stability to the well-being of the agricultural classes, the Lieutenant-Governor hopes these measures will shortly be attained. The collector of Sarun thinks that people of his district are well off, better off in fact, than their neighbours in some districts of the North-Western Provinces. They are indeed in debt, but Mr. Quinn is not prepared to say that the evils of indebtedness may not be exaggerated; and to this opinion the Commissioner is apparently disposed to agree. The Lieutenant-Governor prefers to retain the old belief, that a load of debt does handicap a ryot in the struggle for existence in an overcrowded Indian district, and weakens the springs of industry. The people of Durbhanga have, in Mr. Boxwell's opinion, reached "a respectable average of rustic comfort," and the sub-divisional officer of Tajpore has observed, that granaries are everywhere well filled, that houses are being improved, and tanks and wells excavated. Such assurances of progress from a portion of Behar, where progress was needed, are especially gratifying. From Chumparun Mr. Edgar reports that, when he first visited the district in 1880, the contrast between its inhabitants and the people of Shahabad and Sarun "struck him painfully." It is therefore well to learn, that within the short time that Mr. Edgar held charge of the district "the material condition of the people had been greatly improved." The construction of the railway to Motihari had some effect in raising wages, and fair harvests also helped to better the condition of all classes. Still Mr. Edgar, who has now left the district, does not think things as satisfactory as they might be, and this he attributes more to defects in the land laws than to other causes. The Lieutenant Governor fears that the Chumparun ryot is in a depressed condition, but he trusts that the extension of railway communication to the district will now stimulate trade, and that the energy, tact, and watchfulness of the district officers will check agrarian abuses to which Mr. Edgar alludes, until an amendment in the Rent Law shall supply the true remedy.

RAJSHAHYE DIVISION.

(Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, Oct. 18, 1882.)

While the causes at work to affect the condition of the agriculturing classes, the rich harvest of previous years, and the rather scanty outturn of the rice crop in the year under report, were much the same in all districts; there is still a considerable diversity in the accounts given of the general prosperity by the different district officers. From Dinagapore and Rajshahye, it is reported that no change has taken place. Apparently the agricultural population have plenty to eat, but cannot get rid of their surplus produce. The opening of the railway to Dinagapore next year should supply a remedy for the state of things. As regards Serajgunge the sub-divisional officer states (and the collector is of opinion that the statement is true of the whole Pubna district) that the peasantry are in particularly good condition. The ryots have repaired, and in some cases enlarged their dwelling houses, they have provided themselves with better clothing, and the judging from the purchases they may be seen making at the bazaars and hauts, I should say that they have throughout the year been able to provide themselves with an abundance of food. The same opinion is expressed by the district officer of Bogra. In many places in this district the fall of prices in paddy has led to a wider breadth of jute cultivation. Of Rungpore, on the other hand, it is stated that the incomes of the people have been seriously contracted by the fall in the price of produce, and that their power of indulging in luxuries has diminished, though the peasants are plentifully supplied with food. In Julpigoorie also the condition of the people is said to have deteriorated, but this is ascribed in part to the prevalence of cattle plague. The demand for labour and produce in Darjeeling has rendered both labourers and cultivators in that district prosperous, the only exception to the general affluence, being found among the sub-tenants of the Jotedars of the Terai.

(Speech of Sir Ashley Eden on the condition of the peasantry of Bengal, delivered at Dacca, 1877.)

"Great as was the progress which I knew had been made in the position of the cultivating classes, I was quite unprepared to find them occupying a position so different from that which I remember them to occupy when I first came to the country. They were then poor and oppressed, with little incentive to increase productive powers of the soil. I find them now as prosperous, as independent, and as comfortable as the peasantry, I believe, of any country in the world; well fed, well clothed, free to enjoy the full benefit of their labour, and able to hold their own or obtain prompt redress for any wrong."

(Speech of Sir Ashley Eden on the condition of the peasantry of Behar, delivered at Bankipore, 1881, in reply to an address of the Behar Landholders' Association.)

"I can assure you that nothing has given me greater pleasure than to notice, as I have had ample opportunities of doing, the extraordinary improvement in the condition of the people. It is made manifest in a hundred ways daily, even to the most casual observer. I hear the same story from all classes, official and non-official, and it is a matter for general congratulation."

"This improvement is due to various causes; first and foremost are the full harvest beyond the recollection of the present generation, and these full harvests followed years of trial and famine; next there has been, with growing prosperity, an increase in the value of land, a general awakening of the cultivating classes, and an improved knowledge of their legal rights and privileges, and this has, I hope, been accompanied by a strict administration of the law. Then there has been a greater readiness on the part of landlords to recognise and affirm the rights of cultivators, and I hope that this may to some extent be due to the influence of your Association."

What better proofs are needed to attest the material prosperity of the peasantry of Bengal! And if there has been so much increase of prosperity among them, how can the existing land-laws be said to hamper their prosperity? And if the land-laws do not obstruct their prosperity, where is the necessity for radical innovations, subversive of old and cherished rights and positive justice? We pause for a reply.

SELECTED ARTICLES.

THE WATER SUPPLY OF TROOPS IN INDIA.

ON Friday night, at the ordinary meeting of the Medical Officers of Health, at Adam-street, Adelphi; Dr. T. O. Duffield presiding; Mr. Edward Nicholson, Brigade Surgeon Army Medical Department (Retired List), read a paper on the "Water Supply of Troops in India." The speaker described the mode in which water was conveyed to the European troops—the native troops living with their families—at certain stations in leathern bags, and the primitive mode in which water, which was always free from drainage, was raised from wells—namely, by the filling of the bags at the tanks, and he remarked that there could not be a use of pumps, inasmuch as there were no means of repairing European machinery. He described the method of filtering the water in the barracks in olden time through triple earthen vessels (the three-chatty filter), and said that this system was effective as well as simple, and had an advantage to the soldiers over a later filter, inasmuch as the water in the third vessel was cooled down to a dew temperature. With regard to the diseases attributed to water in India, he said that many were attributed to it, but few had been proved to arise from it. Goitre, for instance, had been attributed to water, but this disease was by no means endemic in Southern India, which afforded every variety of water containing mineral substances. Calculus was most rare in Southern India. Elephantiasis was also attributed to water at Cochin, and residents in that part sent long distances for water, when simple boiling would have been effective. Diseases engendered by parasitic worms had indeed been proved to arise from water, and no filtering would prevent this, while boiling would prevent the evil. He denied that water from the rice fields engendered ague. He then traced out the course of an army corps on the march, and accounted for much of the diseases, such as cholera and enteric fever, and pointed out that the existence of true enteric fever in India had been denied. It happened that the demonstration of the cause of fever in each case was not always easy even in Europe, and it was very difficult in India. In the vast number of cases the Indians had no European medical attendance, and there were few opportunities for the study of native diseases. Hence the Indian medical officers could not speak with certainty of the extent of enteric fever among the population, and it would follow that if the disease did not exist among the natives it must have been generated de novo among the Europeans. But it was now admitted that enteric fever did occur among the Indians, and it was certain that a large proportion of their mortality, even in the non-malarious districts, was due to fevers. The habits of the native population were highly conducive to the spread of enteric fever. Soldiers, especially the fresh arrivals, were addicted to roaming about the bazaars, and as the inhabitants of these places lived in a particularly dirty way, the water with which the soldiers quenched their thirst was so polluted that there was no difficulty in accounting for outbreaks of fever among troops. The propagation of cholera by drinking water was generally accepted in India, and though he had never been able to trace any case to this cause, yet he had seen many instances of the manner in which the disease could be spread by the pollution of drinking water on the march. The mortality from cholera was largely connected with travelling by road, and the facility, he remarked with which the railways carried the natives at low fares appeared to have had a material effect in checking the epidemic form of the disease. He remarked upon the difficulty for providing for troops upon the march, the marches being necessary to give the troops experience, and he gave the results of the experiment with newly constructed filter carts in the place of the old "pukhal" system, these results being a good supply of water and the preservation of the troops' health. An interesting discussion followed. Thanks to Mr. Nicholson closed the meeting.

THE HACKNEY MEETING AGAINST THE ILBERT BILL.

A MEETING to protest against the Ilbert Bill was held on Tuesday evening at the Morley Hall, Hackney. Sir HARDINGE GIFFARD, Q.C., M.P., presided over a large gathering composed mainly of working men. An organised attempt to disturb the meeting was defeated by the bulk of those present insisting upon giving the speakers a hearing. The chairman was supported by Mr. A. R. Scroble, Q.C., (late Advocate-General for Bombay), Mr. J. M. Maclean (formerly of Bombay), Colonel Prendergast Walsh, Mr. F. T. Atkins, of Allahabad (the delegate of the working men of India on this Bill), and a number of ladies.

The CHAIRMAN, in his introductory speech, said that in view of the overwhelming importance of the measure to our countrymen and countrywomen in India, removal from the immediate protection of our system of jurisprudence, he hoped that the discussion would be removed from the sphere of party politics. (Cheers.) It had united a large body of opinion drawn from both sides of politics, and the matter as a whole ought to be regarded as one of abstract justice. It affected in the highest possible degree those who were without other protection than that which English law and privilege gave them—English men and women sparsely scattered over a country of vast extent and with a population of 250 millions. It much more nearly affected working men engaged in the various industries of the country than the rich and powerful. This was not a question of getting rid of all privilege or the peculiar rights of one set of people or the other, secured by statute to the natives of India and to Europeans respectively. He denied that it was a movement directed against the natives of India. If it was proposed to do away with their rights, he would be as much against such a bill as against the present one; and surely it was not unreasonable to say that that which they would oppose if it sought to deprive the Indian of his rights, they ought also to oppose if it sought to deprive the European of his rights. (Cheers.)

Mr. ATKINS said it was twenty years since he had last been in England, and he was pleased to observe the improved political status of the working men. He then went on to compare their position at home with that of their brethren in India, and pointed out that the children of English subjects were denied the privilege of competing on equal terms with the natives for appointments in the public service. Now, the crowning act of injustice was that of attempting to deprive our countrymen in India of the right they possessed in common with people at home. Mr. ATKINS went on, amid some interruption from the opposition section of the meeting, to speak of the tendency among the natives of India to trump up false charges, and quoted Lord Northbrook in support of his assertion. He was not opposed to the people of India, but this he would say, that those whose temples and priesthood were maintained in a sense by the wages of the social evil could not be regarded as fit persons to sit on the bench and exercise jurisdiction. (Hisses and Cheers.) People in India did not forget that the author of the Cawnpore massacre was a man who had received an English education and who, three weeks before that massacre, was the honoured guest of an Englishman. (Cheers.)

Mr. J. M. MACLEAN moved—"That this meeting condemns the Ilbert Bill, as, in addition to being unnecessary and uncalled for, it deprives British-born subjects of a constitutional right, and is therefore injurious to the best interests of our Indian Empire." (Cheers.) Many Englishmen, no doubt, supported the Ilbert Bill from a sentiment most honourable to them, because they were under the false impression that Anglo-Indians in India possessed powers and privileges which they abused by oppressing the natives. That, however, was an entire misconception of the position, for, far from having exceptional privileges they were a small minority who had had nearly every one of their privileges taken away from them. The concessions promised by Lord Northbrook were insufficient, they had come too late, and, moreover, Lord Ripon could not be trusted. He was the most conspicuous failure in the history of India. (Cheers and disturbance.) All that Anglo-Indians claimed was to be put on a fair footing with their fellow-countrymen.

Mr. SCOBLE, Q.C., seconded the resolution, controverting Lord Northbrook's statement at Bristol, that not one jot or tittle of the principle of the Bill had been given up.

The resolution was carried by an overwhelming majority amid disturbance from the Liberal opposition, and after Mr. PICKERSGILL had been afforded a hearing in favour of the Bill, another resolution, deciding that the opinion of the meeting should be made known to Mr. Fawcett and Mr. Holms, the members for Hackney, was also agreed to, and a vote of thanks to Sir Hardinge Giffard for presiding, closed the meeting.

THE AKHAS.

THE Akhas, who as will be seen from our Calcutta telegrams, have just committed a raid on Balibarahat, the border station and a forest reserve of the British district of Durrung in the province of Assam, are a small tribe which has latterly been well behaved. They are divided into two clans, the Hazari-Khoas or "eaters of a thousand hearths," and the Kapas-chors, or "thieves who lurk about the cotton plants." Their names indicate with sufficient accuracy their calling. Their homes lie on the eastern borders of Bhutan, and they hold several of the valleys sloping from some of the loftiest altitudes of the Himalaya. For twenty years at the beginning of the century, as well as for an indefinite period in remoter times, they ravaged the district of Durrung, which stretches south of their villages to the banks of the Brahmapootra. Under a chief known as the Thangi Rajah they carried terror and destruction among the people of the plains, and it was only four years after the conquest of Assam by the English that their raids were stopped by the capture of their leader. Thangi Rajah was then sent to prison at Gowhatti to learn ways of peace; but in 1832 he was released and allowed to return to his people in the hope that he would thenceforth set them a good example. His temper had been misjudged, however, for no sooner did he cross the British frontier than he resumed his depredations with greater vigour than ever before. During ten years he continued these hostilities without being checked, and it is said that during that period he massacred every man, woman, and child who fell into his hands. But in 1842 he gave himself up, and induced his followers to swear that they would keep the peace. An oath was taken to that effect—"the chiefs holding the skins of a tiger, a bear, and some elephants' dung, and killing a fowl"—and in return they were granted a small allowance. From that time to the present they have faithfully kept their promises, and showed no inclination to resume their old robber life. In 1873 a small strip of land in the plains was granted to them for tillage, and their chief subsequently sent two of his younger brothers to Tezpor, the chief town of the Durrung district to be educated. Apparently the good conduct and praiseworthy protestations of forty years have not availed to eradicate the savage instincts of their origin and worldly circumstances.

Garrett, officiating judge, 24-Pergunnahs.

We observe that the reports of the meetings held in different districts are not given. We propose to notice the opinions hereafter.

THE "UNFORTUNATE TELEGRAM."

THE Times of India says:—Reuter's Simla agent drops the ingenious theory about an "ought having dropped out" of his figures, and now simply says that "205" became "26" at Bushire. In future he should, like other business men, telegraph his figures in cypher. We must, however, take exception to the complacent tone in which he congratulates himself upon having been supplied with an advance copy of the opinions. It was grossly unfair to the correspondents of the English papers, and grossly unfair to the whole Anglo-Indian Press, that Reuter's Simla agent should have been specially favoured. It was known that the opinions would be published at Calcutta in the Gazette of India on the evening of the 7th September. Reuter has an agent at Calcutta as well as at Simla, and this gentleman must have been perfectly competent to deal with the opinions when they were available to the correspondents of all the English and all the Anglo-Indian papers. It should, perhaps, be remembered that the Simla authorities had been most jealously guarding these opinions. They had even sent round a notice to the local Governments requesting them not to allow their opinion to transpire until they had been published in the Gazette of India at Calcutta, and yet some one or other in connection somehow or other with the Government of India felt himself justified in supplying Reuter's Simla agent with documents which even the provincial Governments were enjoined to treat as strictly confidential. The result of the experiment has been so extremely disagreeable that we may hope it will never be repeated. Reuter's figures, even as they are now given, are still in a muddle, and afford no sort of idea of the opinions.

The Madras correspondent of the Pioneer writes:—This is the land of jests after all. Let me give you two humorous instances. The first is that of a judge—am I right, I wonder, in assuming he must be an Irishman?—who in passing sentence of death upon a murderer, added to the usual formula as follows:—"The sentence of the court is that you be suspended by your neck till you be dead. May the Lord have mercy upon your soul subject to appeal to the High Court." The second is that of a magistrate and collector whose administration of the Salem district has been most peculiarly unfortunate. The gentleman in question was visiting the gaol at Salem the day before he left the district for England. Seeing a woman in prison whose appearance or story interested him, he asked the gaoler what her offence and sentence were, and how much of her time she had served. On hearing the reply, the kindly-hearted civilian ordered the woman's immediate release, and added "it doesn't matter, I'm going home to-morrow." The woman was discharged. The humanity of the proceeding excites my profoundest admiration.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1883.

THE LATEST MOVE OF THE GOVERNMENT
ON THE ILBERT BILL QUESTION.

Two important facts are made clear by the elaborate speech of Lord Northbrook on the Ilbert Bill at Bristol, last week, and by his announcement in that speech that Government is prepared to sacrifice the whole of the principle of the Bill, and most of its details, if only Lord Ripon be allowed with impunity to pass so much of it as may be sufficient to wreak his vengeance on some portion, at least, of the Anglo-Indian non-official community. The two facts we refer to are these:—First, that the home Government is so terrified by Lord Ripon's threats of resignation, and by apprehensions of possible danger to the prestige of the present Ministry in this country in case those threats were carried out, that it is prepared to defend in theory every act of the Viceroy—even those acts which in practice it is compelled to check and disavow. And secondly, that Lord Ripon's weakness of mind and vanity so entirely overbear all considerations of statesmanship and prudence, that he is prepared deliberately to risk all the anarchy and confusion that is unanimously predicted for even the eviscerated measure announced by Lord Northbrook by those best qualified to judge of its probable effects, rather than frankly and honestly to admit the blunder he has committed.

Mr. Ilbert, in his Statement of Objects and Reasons, declared that the only object of the Bill was "to remove from the Code, at once and completely, every judicial disqualification which is based merely on race distinctions." How will this apply to the emasculated Bill? All native joint magistrates, and judicial officers of similar position with first-class powers—all native judicial officers of all ranks and classes in Assam, and other non-regulation provinces—will be disqualified merely because of their race! We quite allow the value to the European community—and especially to the very important English community of Assam—of the emasculation of the Bill. But, the very magnitude of the surrender made by the Government, especially in regard to Assam, utterly stultifies the partial disfranchisement of the European community in Bengal, Behar, and the other regulation provinces; and, as a matter of fact, makes the whole of the proposed arrangement so monstrously absurd and anomalous, as to render it impossible that it should last, even for a few years. Moreover, when once the principle has been laid down, and accepted by the Government, that the privilege of jurisdiction is the privilege of the judge, not solely that of the accused, and that the dignity of the native judge depends on the possession of like jurisdiction over European British subjects with his English colleagues; what an intolerable slur will thereby be cast on the native joint magistrates with first-class powers, on the native deputy commissioners and assistant commissioners, and, indeed, on all the native judicial officers of rank who are still deprived of the jurisdiction!

It has been widely assumed that Lord Northbrook's proposals exclude the "statutory civilians" from the jurisdiction; but a careful examination of Lord Northbrook's words shows clearly that this is not the case, and that no distinction is to be made between native civilians selected by competition in England, and "statutory civilians." We are inclined entirely to agree with the Government, that no distinction can fairly or properly be made between these two classes; any such distinction, not being founded on the intelligible ground of the birthright of Englishmen to be tried by their own countrymen, would be obnoxious to Mr. Justice Stephen's criticism in regard to a personal disqualification of a judge, and would fatally lower the position of the statutory civilians. But still, as a matter of fact, not a single Indian authority, whether for or against the Bill as a whole, has advocated the extension of the jurisdiction to these untried, unproven "statutory civilians;" and this very dilemma affords, perhaps, one of the strongest proofs of the general unwisdom of the Bill, and of the whole theory of the Government. For in this, as in every other point, Lord Ripon's love of abstract theory draws him almost imperceptibly into positions that are utterly absurd from a practical point of view.

The experience the English community in India has had, in the recent controversy, of the power of the "thin end of the wedge" argument, by the ungenerous use made of former concessions of principle in regard to native presidency magistrates, would probably, in any case, make it averse from accepting meekly a set of proposals that evidently are only designed as "a step in advance." But the ridiculous absurdity of the arrangement proposed by Lord Northbrook is so patent on the face of it, that its suggestion can hardly fail still further to exasperate the feeling with which Anglo-Indians regard the crooked courses of the Government in regard to this measure. We tremble to think of the effect that will be produced on the minds of the non-official Anglo-Indians, already abused and spurned almost beyond endurance, by this fresh proof of Lord Ripon's determination to insult and injure them. We can only trust that they will not lose hope altogether. Let them take heart; and remember that, in the whole course of our history as a nation, no class of Englishmen has ever been permanently deprived of its just rights, if it possesses the wisdom to determine to assert those rights only by constitutional means, as well as the tenacity (which certainly will not be wanting in India) never to rest till those rights are restored to them.

HOME NEWS.

ORIENTAL GAS COMPANY.—The report of the directors for the twelve months ended on the 30th of June last, states that the extension of public lighting during the twelve months has been as follows:—Eighty-eight lamps erected in the town of Calcutta, eight in the suburbs, &c., and fifteen at Howrah, making a total of 111. An order has been received for fixing forty-two lamps in the grounds of Government House. The adverse state of the exchange between India and Europe continues to exercise a most unfavourable effect upon the profits of the company. The balance of general revenue (after paying debenture interest and crediting £2,500 to reserve account) is £21,079 3s. 5d., out of which the directors recommend a distribution of 5 per cent., free of income-tax, payable on the 4th day of December next, making, with the interim dividend of 4 per cent. on the 4th of June last, a total of 9 per cent. for the year.

BOMBAY GAS COMPANY.—The half-yearly general meeting was held on Thursday, at the offices, Drapers'-gardens, Throgmorton-avenue. Mr. D. T. Evans presided, and in moving the adoption of the report observed that they maintained the usual dividend, and they were able to carry £2,700 to the reserve fund, £2,300 to the exchange equalisation account, and to carry forward nearly £200. There has been a small decrease in the revenue from gas and meter rent, owing to less consumption by theatres, hotels, and clubs. The cost of working showed a reduction. They have saved over £500 in the expenses of carbonisation. The cost of their coal had been £1 12s. 6d. a ton, as compared with £1 13s. 4d. Their stock of coal amounted to 10,000 tons, but by the beginning of December this quantity would be reduced to 6,000 tons, or about seven months' supply. Their loss on exchange had been small, as they had brought home little in the half-year under review. The loss must be expected to be much larger in the current half-year. They had now to contend with the electric light. They had been and were most anxious to keep faith with the municipality and to conciliate public opinion. They had raised their standard of illuminating power from twelve candles—which was all they agreed to by the contract—to fifteen candles. The report was eventually adopted.

SOUTHERN MAHRATTA RAILWAY.—A special meeting is convened for the 27th inst., for the purpose of passing a resolution authorising the directors to conclude an agreement with the Secretary of State for India with regard to the construction by the company of a railway from Poona to Belgaum, known as the West Deccan line. The Government is to extend from June, 1887, to June, 1889, the guarantee of 4 per cent. upon the company's share capital. It is proposed to increase the capital of the company from £3,000,000 to 5,000,000.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.—The opening meeting of the sixtieth session of this society was held at No. 22, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly, on Monday afternoon. The chair was occupied by Sir Bartle Frere, President of the society, and among those present were Major-General Sir Henry C. Rawlinson, K.C.B. (director), Sir Thomas Colebrooke, M.P., Sir H. Barrow Ellis, General MacLagan, Sir E. Clive Bayley, Sir W. Rose Robinson, Major-General Sir Lewis Pelly, Colonel Malcolm Haig, Colonel Keatinge, and Mr. T. H. Thornton, C.B.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH THE EAST.—The cables of the Indian Government in the Persian Gulf being now restored, the Indo-European Telegraph Company is prepared to accept messages for transmission between this country and India, Penang, Singapore, China, Java, Australia, New Zealand, Persia, and Turkey. Telegrams may be handed in as usual at the company's offices. Telegrams handed in at postal telegraph stations, should be marked "via Indo," for which words no charge is made.

INDIAN STUDENTS.—At Oxford, on Tuesday, Congregation passed by fifty-four votes to sixteen the preamble of an important statute to enable natives of India to offer an Oriental language—namely, either Sanskrit, Arabic, or Persian—in the place of either Greek or Latin at Responses and Moderations. The reasons for this measure, which are very obvious, were detailed by Dr. Markby, while the Principal of St. Edmund Hall objected that it conceded living or spoken languages as a subject of examination, and that if this were conceded to natives of India, it would be demanded logically for Englishmen. He, therefore, gave notice of an amendment for the omission of Arabic and Persian as subjects of examination.

THE SILVER MARKET was flat on Wednesday on the unfavourable allotment of Indian Council drafts. A small business was done in bars in the morning at 50½d., but the market was very weak at this figure later on. The quotation for Mexican Dollars was also quite nominal at 49½d., the coins being unsaleable at this price. Rupee Four per Cent. Paper declined to 79¾ to 80¼ and the Four-and-a-half per Cents. closed at 82½ to 82¾.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—Tenders were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England for £300,000 in Government bills and Telegraphic Transfers on India. The amounts in bills allotted were:—On Calcutta £21,000, and on Bombay £1,000. Allotments of Telegraphic Transfers were made as under:—On Calcutta £70,000, and on Madras £10,000. Tenders for bills and for Telegraphic Transfers at 1.7 7-16d. and above, will receive in full. The same amount will be offered for tender next Wednesday. According to a statement issued by the India Office the amount of bills and Telegraphic Transfers sold is as follows:—From the 14th to the 20th of November the amount sold was Rs.19,99,000, realising £162,484, making a total since the 1st of April of Rs.1,125,92,150 realising £9,132,742.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

FRIDAY EVENING.

Messrs W. J. and H. Thompson state that business remains quiet, and the low quotations of produce do not lead to much speculation. Coffee, however, attracts some attention. Brazil and other common kinds again meet with an active demand at 2s. per cwt. above last week's prices, in response to the advance on the Continent and New York. Fine East India has realised full prices. Other descriptions are firmer. The last public sale this year on account of the Netherlands Trading Company is declared for the 21st inst., when 113,737 bags, 458 cases will be offered. Good ordinary Java valued at about 33 cents. In the sugar market a dull tone prevails. Crystallised Demerara of the new crop has been freely sold on arrival at 6d. to 9d. per cwt. under previous quotations. In other cane sugar the only feature is a demand for Jaggery, with sales of fair extent at current low rates. Beet shows a further slight decline. Estimates of the yield in Germany has been increased. Refined is quiet here, while a better inquiry has prevailed in the Clyde upon last week's terms. Burmah rice attracts rather more attention. There has been no feature to notice in China tea. Common to fair Congous are steady at the recent improvement; other grades selling slowly. A strong market for India, prices being in some cases rather dearer. Resolutions were passed at the spice sales yesterday with reference to the periods of selling cinnamon after the next quarterly sales, and copies await the signature of all interested in the trade, which it is hoped will bring about a settlement of this vexed question. Black and white pepper, Cochin ginger, and Zanzibar cloves have declined, the markets being very dull.

COFFEE.—At the public sales the small quantity of Plantation Ceylon—viz., 203 casks, sixty-eight barrels and bags went 1s. to 1s. 6d. dearer: small, 65s. 6d. to 68s.; middling, 74s. 6d. to 78s.; good middling to bold, 82s. 6d. to 90s. Forty casks, thirty-four cases, fifty-six bags East India sold at steady rates.

RICE.—Cargoes of Burmah are rather dearer this week. No sales to-day.

TUESDAY EVENING.

TEA.—The attention of the trade is almost exclusively devoted to the public auctions which are very large this week—Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday's catalogues comprising about 37,000 packages "without reserve." 20,000 packages passed to-day. They consisted chiefly of Congous—fair to medium black leaf brought 7½d. to 1s. per lb.; common to fair red leaf, 6¼d. to 8d.; medium, 9d. to 10d. per lb. Some parcels of fine fancy scented capers sold at full rates.

COFFEE.—A strong market, and common sorts of foreign have in some cases brought further advance. The public sales of plantation Ceylon to-day went rather higher and included a few lots of the new crop. 105 casks, 71 barrels and bags sold, middling, 73s. 6d. to 79s. 6d.; good to fine ditto, 85s.; bold, 90s. to 95s. and 100s. 122 casks, 607 bags East India low to good medium, 68s. to 79s. 6d.; bold 82s. 6d.

RICE.—Business has been done in Rangoon on the spot at 8s. 6d. A cargo of 1,000 tons Necranzie has sold at 8s. open charter, being rather dearer; also one of Rangoon by steamer, at 8s. 9d. per charter.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

(From the Bombay Gazette, Nov. 2.)

The Commander in Chief in India (Sir D. Stewart), accompanied by the Adjutant General and Quartermaster General and Captain Stuart, aide de camp, left Simla for Subathu at 7 a.m. on Wednesday week. His Excellency is expected to reach his camp, now being formed at Banda, to-day, where he will be joined by the rest of his staff, consisting of Colonel Gossett, Military Secretary; Major Ford, assistant adjutant general; Colonel Moore, Persian interpreter; Surgeon Major Davies, Captain Haines, aide de camp, and Lieutenants Grierson and Wheeler.

H.E. the Commander in Chief of the Bombay Army (General Hardinge) left Poona on Monday by the twelve o'clock train, with the Military Secretary (Colonel Rivett-Carnac) and the Quartermaster General of the Army. His Excellency goes to Mhow and Nuserabad, and will return to Bombay about the middle of November. In December, General Hardinge will visit the stations in the southern districts of his command.

Sir Frederick and Lady Roberts left Ootacamund on Oct. 29, for Trichinopoly and other stations, and will be absent from Ooty till Dec. 22 next.

It is reported from Simla that it is not unlikely that Brigadier General Dandridge will be compelled shortly to take sick leave to England, and that Sir Hugh Gough, commanding 12th Bengal Cavalry, will officiate for him in the command of Peshawur District.

Captain A. Keene and Lieutenant F. W. L. Birdwood, R.A., have been placed on the second list on being appointed to the Bombay Native Mountain Batteries.

According to present arrangements, the Hon. General Wilson, military member of the Viceroy's Council, will arrive in Bombay from Kurrachee on Nov. 28, and will leave for Pachmari on Dec. 1.

Colonel Sir Baker Russell, K.C.B., who has just returned to India, has resumed command of the 13th Hussars at Muttra.

Colonel J. J. McLeod Innes, V.C., Royal Engineers, Inspector General of Military Works, has been granted three months' privilege leave, from Nov. 30. Colonel G. P. de P. Falconnet will take over the duties at Bombay, and Colonel McLeod Innes will rejoin at Aden.

Colonel A. T. Baldwin, Madras Staff Corps, 7th Native Infantry, has been granted furlough out of India for two years.

Lieutenant Colonel E. Temple, Officiating Commandant,

Meywar Bheel Corps, is about proceeding on furlough to Europe shortly.

Lieutenant Colonel Sartorius resigns his appointment as officiating second in command of the 4th Bengal Cavalry, and is posted to Rawalpindi for general duty.

Colonel C. W. Chester, Commandant, 26th Punjab Native Infantry, has rejoined at Peshawur from furlough in England, taking over the command from Major Fitzgerald, who has been officiating since his return from Staff employ, and who will now hold the officiating appointment of Second in Command, until the return of Colonel Tulloch, in 1885. Colonel R. C. Brook, 1st South Lancashire Regiment, also rejoined, from leave to England, on the 25th instant, and resumed command of the battalion (late 40th), which had been held during his absence by Lieutenant Colonel White.

Lieutenant Colonel Griffiths, 3rd Sikhs, and Lieutenant Colonel Lance, 2nd Punjab Cavalry, will represent the Punjab Frontier Force at the Bangalore camp of exercise.

A farewell dinner was given by the members of the N.W.P. Club to Colonel Bevan and the officers of the Loyal North Lancashire Regiment on Friday evening.

Major R. H. Wallace, No. 5 Battalion 1st Brigade, Welsh Division, and Major C. A. Empson, No. 1 Battalion, 1st Brigade, Northern Division, are permitted to exchange.

Major W. W. Hooper, 4th Madras Light Cavalry, is appointed second in command of the 1st Madras L.C., vice Colonel Cherry, on furlough.

Major C. D. Swete, wing commander 10th Bengal Native Infantry, intends proceeding on furlough out of India shortly.

Major C. W. Robinson, 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade, is appointed to officiate as assistant adjutant general of the Northern Division, Bombay Army, vice Lieutenant Colonel Cunningham, who goes on leave in India.

Captain R. A. Gilchrist, of the Bengal Staff Corps and Hyderabad Contingent, officiates as military secretary to the Hyderabad Residency for Colonel Hastings Fraser, who is proceeding to England.

Captain Pryce, 21st M.N.I., has been appointed wing commander in the 9th M.N.I.

Captain G. R. Ellis, Essex Regiment, is ordered to proceed to England to join the 2nd Battalion of his regiment, into which he has been promoted.

Captain Harward, 2nd Royal Warwickshire, and Lieutenant Broughton, 2nd Dorsetshire, are to be placed on probation for the Army Pay Department.

Lieutenants Russell, Cowie, Capper, Dixon, Stothert, Petrie, and Thackwell, Royal Engineers, lately arrived from England, have been attached to the Sappers and Miners for work on the Hurnai road. Captain Geldie, R.E., joins the Sappers at Roorkee.

Lieutenants Savage and Atkin, Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, have been appointed to the 1st and 25th N.I., respectively, as Staff Corps probationers.

The following medical officers on arrival from England will do duty at the stations specified:—Surgeon Major T. O'Farrell, Peshawur; Surgeons A. E. Haves, Umballa; J. M. Young, Allahabad; and G. Jameson, Meer.

The following appointments of permanent wing officers have been made:—Lieutenant Reid, from the 30th to the 27th N.I.; Lieutenant Beaver, from the 9th to the 4th N.I.; Lieutenant Anderson, from the 5th to the 3rd N.I.; Lieutenants Tulloch and Grey, to the 38th N.I.; and Lieutenant Pritchard, from the 39th to the 8th N.I.

Lieutenant Dobbie is appointed adjutant of the 30th N.I., vice Maisy, who vacates on promotion.

Lieutenant F. B. Johnstone, R.A., proceeds from Morar to Meerut to join A Battery 4th Brigade, into which he has been transferred.

The following removals have been made:—Lieutenant Giles, East Lancashire; Morris, Royal Irish; Sillery, Tombe, Isham, and Wittington, Suffolk Regiment, all to the first battalions of their regiments; and Major Kinloch, King's Royal Rifle Corps, and Lieutenant Gayer, Lincolnshire Regiment, to the 2nd Battalion.

Surgeon Major D. C. G. Bonerus and Lieutenant Colonel Charlie, King's Royal Rifle Corps, have been granted extensions of leave in England to April 11, 1884, and Dec. 21 next respectively.

Surgeon J. B. Gibbons is transferred from Dinapore to Umballa for officiating medical charge of the 11th B.L., vice Crofts, who goes to Sialkote in similar charge of the 10th B.L.

The Madras Government proposed recently that, in lieu of the present emoluments of the appointment of commandant of the Body Guard of H.E. the Governor of Madras, a staff salary of Rs. 350 per mensem, with an allowance of Rs. 50 per mensem for stationery and repairs of arms, be assigned to his command. This proposal was seconded by the Government of India, and forwarded to the Home Government for orders. In reply, her Majesty's Secretary of State for India informed the Government of India that this staff salary would be admissible with Staff Corps pay only; and during the furlough of the incumbent of the appointment it would be divisible between him and his locum tenens under the conditions of the furlough regulations.

of 1868 and 1875; the allowance for stationery and for the repair of arms being drawn by the officer actually performing the duties of the command. Observing that no additional cost will be entailed upon the State by the adoption of this proposal, the Home Government approve of its being brought into effect.

The Madras doctors, following the example of their confrères in the North West, decided at a meeting held on Oct. 7 to form a Madras branch of the British Medical Association. Drs. Sibthorpe and Branfoot were appointed the local honorary secretaries.

Writing with reference to Reuter's telegram announcing Ayub Khan's intention to visit Bokhara, the Lahore paper says:—Ayub will not be the first Afghan Prince who has enjoyed the hospitality of Mozuffar-ud-din, the Ameer of Bokhara. Abdul Rahman himself lived for some time in Bokhara, and received substantial help, on various occasions, from the Ameer. When Abdul Rahman invaded Afghan Turkestan, in 1865, and drove Shere Ali from Cabul, he had depended largely on the aid given by the Ameer of Bokhara, who will very likely befriend Ayub in much the same way. It is certain, at any rate, that if Ayub does go to Bokhara, it will be with a view to renewing his attempts to regain the throne occupied by his father; and as the Ameer of Bokhara is a dependent on Russia, it is not difficult to see in this matter—if the facts as stated by Reuter are correct—Russian intrigue. The preparations which are being made by the Russians for an advance in the direction of Herat, the presence of Russian agents in Afghanistan and in the semi-independent States about the Upper Oxus, as well as the rumours, it may be added, which reach India from Central Asia—all tend to show that Russia is preparing to re-adjust her frontier. That, at present, this frontier is highly unscientific, can be seen by a glance at the map. Sooner or later, it must be brought nearer to the boundary of British dominions. There are signs just now—some of which we have indicated—to show that the attempt will be made soon; and the question remains whether English interests will be affected. Mr. Gladstone's Government evidently thinks that its interests would suffer; for it has reaffirmed the principle that England will oppose any Russian interference in Afghanistan. The time is rapidly approaching when that principle will either have to be acted on—or surrendered.

ANTICIPATING AN UNPLEASANT EXPLANATION.—It has been generally, and perhaps not unnaturally, concluded that Sir Auckland Colvin was offered his present post in India with the understanding that he was prepared to accept, if not to advocate, the views of the Government on such questions as the Ilbert Bill and local autonomy. As a matter of fact—and the fact is one that in justice to the Government both here and at home should be widely known—Sir Auckland was not even asked his opinion on these momentous subjects either before or after his nomination. His opinion has yet to be declared. Of course, if the confidential ruling of the Secretary of State, which leaves the members of the Executive Council no alternative course between voting with the Viceroy and resignation of office really exists, as has also been categorically asserted in our columns, the omission of any form of "squaring" the new Financial Minister might be attributed to the operation of a less lofty view of the situation than the one apparently adopted. But be the case as it may, the bare circumstance is absolutely as we have stated. It will be interesting to observe, when the time comes, in what way a man equally sagacious and independent will reconcile himself to an even subordinate share in imposing legislation of which, reasoning from some general knowledge of his views about Indian administration, we should have no hesitation in concluding he would be unlikely to approve.—Pioneer, Oct. 9.

KANGRA VALLEY INDIAN TEA GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
7, NEW COVENTRY-STREET, LEICESTER-SQUARE.

The object of the Planters who have formed this Association is to establish a business for the direct supply of Tea from the Plantations of the Kangra Valley to the Public.

The distinctive feature of the business of this Association is, that the Tea is delivered to consumers in the original One-lb. tin foil lined parcels in which it is packed in the Valley, and it is guaranteed to be Absolutely Pure. There are three qualities, retailing respectively at 4s., 3s., and 2s. 6d.

The Association hopes that it may, without presumption, safely recommend this Tea to the Public, believing that it will continue to give the greatest satisfaction.

A RIDE TO KHIVA

BY CAPTAN FRED BURNABY,
Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cocker's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EX- PRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set-forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 200 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1883.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay Nov. 9; Madras and Allahabad, Nov. 7; Calcutta Nov. 6.

ON Monday last, Mr. F. T. Atkins, the delegate of the English working-men of India, addressed a large meeting of working-men at Margate on the Ilbert Bill; and a resolution was passed, with only three dissentients, strongly condemning the Bill. Mr. Branson will address a meeting to-night on the same subject at Derby, which is expected to be an important one; and on Saturday Mr. Atkins will speak at Oldham, with Mr. J. M. Maclean in the chair.

THE "Kensington Parliament" is perhaps the most influential debating-club in England. It is certainly one of the most cultured; and as its President is Sir Charles Dilke, it may be taken for granted that educated Liberalism is well represented there. The first four weeks of the Session have been virtually devoted to the Ilbert Bill; and on Monday last the debate was concluded by the proposition to withdraw the Bill, being affirmed without a division—so hopeless was the chance of those who supported the Bill, who were deserted by large numbers who habitually sit on the Liberal side of the House. And yet the Bill had been defended in the House by some of the very ablest of its supporters elsewhere—notably by the Rev. Malcolm Maccoll, Mr. Rowe Bennett, and Mr. Abdul Majid. Among the speakers against the Bill were Mr. Branson, Mr. J. D. Mayne, Mr. Dawson, Mr. Roper Lethbridge, Mr. George Batten, and Mr. Horne-Payne.

MUCH interest, a great deal of amusement, and still more disgust, have been felt by Anglo-Indians at home during the past week, by the spicy details which are gradually leaking out, of Lord Kimberley's artful attempt to turn the flank of the opponents of the Ilbert Bill by "nobbling" Mr. Atkins. Fortunately, Mr. Atkins has shown himself too honest an Englishman to be awed by the condescension of even the Earl of Kimberley. We give the letters that have appeared on the subject up to date; but, of course, we have not yet heard the last of this attempt at an Indian "Kilmainham Treaty"; indeed, we feel that we owe an apology to the sturdy English working-man who has so nobly earned the gratitude of his compatriots in India, for comparing the unsuccessful attempt at "nobbling" him to the more successful business of Kilmainham.

THE letter from Lord Kimberley's private secretary, which appears in to-day's Times, is so transparently at variance with the letter from the other private secretary which appeared in Saturday's Times, that we imagine little doubt can be felt by any impartial reader as to what really took place at the secret, mysterious meeting in the India Office to which Mr. Atkins was summoned by the "special invitation" of the Secretary of State. In Saturday's letter, Lord Kimberley stated that he had not intended to lay any stress on certain words used by his lordship; in to-day's letter, he appears to say that he did not use those words at all. We presume that there must be some verbal differences or inaccuracies that justify this palpable, flagrant self-contradiction. But that the self-contradiction exists, for all practical purposes, is as clear as daylight. We have had too much of these verbal quibbles in the various telegrams, in the parliamentary utterances founded on "information in the possession of the India Office," and in the other similar dodges, which have been such an unusual and such a deplorable feature in the Government defence of the Ilbert Bill. We entirely agree—though possibly with different expectations in regard to the issue—with our clever Radical contemporary, the Western Morning News, in declaring that Lord Kimberley, after so much hopeless self-entanglement, is now bound in honour to put before the public a plain, unvarnished account of what really did take place at the mysterious interview of Wednesday last. The Western Morning News says:—

"Lord Kimberley is behaving after his own manner in regard to the Ilbert Bill. He called Mr. Atkins, the representative of Indian working men, to his side to beg him to calm the minds of his clients and to stop the agitation. To induce him to undertake the calumet work, he made a communication to Mr. Atkins which he told that gentleman he was on no account to make public, so Mr. Atkins goes about leading the public to understand that Lord Kimberley being in England the special guardian of Lord Ripon's policy and the defender of his integrity, does not approve of Lord Ripon's policy and is ready to overturn it. This is how Mr. Atkins writes to the Times: 'Lord Kimberley replied to a certain question I took the liberty of asking, and I requested his permission to make known that reply to the working-men I represent. This his lordship would not grant, but he said, "You may tell the people in India that the matter now rests with the Council in India, and I wish particularly that it should be clearly understood the English Government had nothing whatever to do with the Bill which had been initiated by Lord Ripon; and I hope efforts will now be made to soothe the minds of the people and stop the agitation." Lord Kimberley emphasised the words in italics. I have respected his lordship's wishes and have not informed the working-men in India of the reply which he desired should not be published, nor have I made known the remark that accompanied that desire, but I have communicated to my constituents as nearly as possible the intimations which Lord Kimberley gave me of the general policy of the Government towards them.' Now it is absolutely necessary for Lord Kimberley to tell us what he did say. He has already denied that in throwing the responsibility entirely on Lord Ripon's shoulders he represented the Government. Perhaps, he will now say, in regard to the Ilbert Bill, what his feelings really are, and whether what he told Mr. Atkins was that, after all, it is not intended to establish equality as regards the magistracy, but only to keep the measure alive until the agitation being cooled down it can be abandoned without discredit. It is necessary for him to speak because this construction has been put upon his words."

"Pronouncing of some doubtful phrase As 'Well, well, we know,' or 'We could an if we would,' Or 'If we list to speak,' or 'There be an if they might,' Or such ambiguous giving out."

Now, that something was said (as Mr. Atkins asserts) by Lord Kimberley about the responsibility for the measure lying with the Government of our great and good Viceroy, is clear from Lord Kimberley's own words last Saturday. To-day, Lord Kimberley's private secretary tells us, somewhat coarsely, that Mr. Atkins's account of what was said is not true—though Mr. Atkins says he committed the words to paper immediately after leaving the sacred presence chamber. But Lord Kimberley does not vouchsafe to tell us what his idea is of what he really did say; nor does he even condescend to say what proof he can adduce of the foul charge he virtually makes against Mr. Atkins of misrepresenting him. Of course we do not for a moment doubt that Lord Kimberley entertains the impression in regard to what took place, which Mr. Bickersteth to-day makes public. Nor, on the other hand, do we for a moment doubt the substantial accuracy of Mr. Atkins's impression on the same point. But what the public wants to know is, which is right? Mr. Atkins has told us the ground on which he bases his impression—that he "committed to paper" the conversation directly after it took place—and he gives us the ipsissima verba of his notes. Lord Kimberley might surely show equal consideration to the public? At present we have simply a bare statement of his lordship's general impression that something was not said, which Mr. Atkins's notes show to have been said. A solemn message to "the people in India"—Lord Kimberley's own words—was surely not given without some record of its purport being preserved, if only in justice to the intermediary employed to communicate the message. The public will await with interest and anxiety the publication of Lord Kimberley's own version of this message.

THE remarks of the Times of India (as telegraphed by the Times Calcutta correspondent) on the compromise proposed by Lord Northbrook, bring out very clearly the point on which we insisted last week, that the proposals so entirely stultify the original position of Lord Ripon's Government in the matter, as to be utterly untenable on any ground whatever. For in every official justification of the original Bill, it was expressly stated that no legislation could be either satisfactory or stable—Mr. Ilbert's own words—that did not go beyond Lord Northbrook's proposals.

THE Civil and Military Gazette of Lahore has arrived at the conclusion, long ago stated also by the Pioneer and virtually the whole Anglo-Indian Press, that there is only one way out of the impasse in which the Government of India finds itself placed by Lord Ripon's magnificent statesmanship. Curiously enough, the very same conclusion was stated last week, with epigrammatic conciseness, by Sir Richard Cross at Workington—"Withdraw the Viceroy, and withdraw the Bill."

WE are glad to see that the admirable letters of Sir James Stephen to the Times on the subject, have been republished in pamphlet-form by Messrs. Macmillan and Co., with some further remarks condemnatory of Lord Northbrook's proposals. We shall notice these in our next issue.

A VERY powerful pamphlet on the same lines has just appeared from the pen of "An Anglo-Indian," and is entitled, "Anglo-Indian Opinion on the Ilbert Bill." We shall take an early opportunity of putting its points before our readers; meanwhile, we recommend the purchase of the pamphlet itself, which is published by Messrs. Dorrell and Son, 15, Charing-cross.

WE learn, on very high authority, that one very beneficial, if somewhat indirect, result of Lord Ripon's failure as a Viceroy, will probably be the abolition of the Simla migration. It is whispered that Lord Ripon's best friends—having failed in their successive attempts to throw the blame on Sir Ashley Eden, on Sir Alfred Lyall, and other scapegoats—have at last decided that the Viceroy's amazing ignorance is mainly due to the "pernicious seclusion" of Simla.

THE meetings in India against the Bill are more crowded and enthusiastic than ever. That held at Silchar shows that the tea-planters are as resolute as ever. And they do well; for it is already rumoured that Lord Ripon has repented him of his idea of letting off the non-regulation Provinces altogether—and that, for the purposes of this hateful Bill, a "Deputy Commissioner" is to be held to be either a "District Magistrate," or a "Sessions Judge," or both. Of course. And next?

TUESDAY's telegrams are more hopeful than those of Monday, in regard to the condition of the crops in Bengal. Still it is clear that there is much cause for anxiety. Fortunately, the province is in good strong hands, and universal confidence is felt. The English public may be trusted to take good care that Bengal is not hampered and ruined by Simla ineptitude.

WE take from the Englishman the following report on the Calcutta Freight Market for the week ending Nov. 6:—

"During the past week there has been a little more desire on the part of shipowners to accept current rates. They seem now to see the apparent hopelessness of holding longer off the market; several vessels have been fixed during the week, and had there been more cargo offering at last prices more would have accepted employment. By canal there has been a little more enquiry for dead weight, and two steamers obtained charters for grain. The market closes quiet with little demand. Our unfixed tonnage stands at 86,463 tons."

Messrs. W. Moran and Co. give the following account of the Calcutta Tea Market for the same week:—

"The market re-opened on the 24th ultimo, when 15,453 packages were offered, and 14,798 changed hands. In consequence of unfavourable reports from the Home side, prices were decidedly easier, but there was a good demand at the decline. Finest sorts were from one to two annas lower. 'Mediums' about one anna, and 'Commons' under eight annas, half an anna lower. Further auctions were held on the 1st instant, when 19,969 packages were brought forward, and of these 19,325 found buyers. The demand was brisk, but though prices showed a downward tendency, there was no material change to note, fine and finest classes, however, being most inquired for."

AND the same authorities furnish the following report on the opening of the Indigo Season:—

"The season opened yesterday, when 779 chests were offered at public sale, of which quantity 528 chests were sold, and the remainder bought in. Prices were generally about Rs. 10 per maund below those paid by private contract before the sales, and are very nearly on a par with the opening rates of last season. The indigo offered consisted entirely of Native Oudes, the quality of which was most ordinary to middling, a few parcels only being of good and desirable quality. Compared to London rates, prices may be quoted par to 3d. advance on July. No European marks from Bengal or Behar are yet arriving in the market, and it seems probable that the sales for the next fortnight will consist entirely of Native Indigo."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending Feb. 9:—

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following is the official summary of the reports of the Agricultural Department on the state of the weather and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending Oct. 30:—

"The rainfall has moderated in Southern India, and agricultural prospects are fair in Madras, Mysore, and Bombay, but the river remains low in Sind, and there is a scarcity of water. In Berar cotton has suffered from the late excessive rains, but other crops are doing well. Rain is wanted in parts of Central India and Rajputana for the rabi, otherwise prospects are favourable. Very little rain has fallen in British Burma; some damage has already been done to rice on high lands and serious fears entertained for the latter sown crop if the break continues. There has been practically no rain during the week throughout the whole of Northern India. Rain is wanted for rice in Upper Assam, and the prospects of the rice harvest are growing worse in Bengal, where rabi operations are also being seriously delayed. In the Central Provinces the weather is seasonable and prospects are excellent. In the North-Western Provinces and Oudh and Punjab the rabi sowings are in need of rain, but prospects are on the whole fair. Harvesting of the kharif is still in general progress. In Madras the yield of oholum, ragi, &c., is reported below the average in several districts, and in the North-Western Provinces the kharif crops have suffered from the comparatively deficient rainfall. Fever is prevalent in parts of Bengal, otherwise the public health is satisfactory. Prices continue to rise in Bengal, and are steady elsewhere."

The following is the report for Bengal:—

"The rains have apparently ceased, and the cold weather is setting in. No rain fell in any of the reporting districts during the week. The rain of the preceding week in Behar and in certain other parts was very slight, and did no appreciable good to the withering rice crops; on the other hand, it somewhat improved the prospects of the rabi cultivation, which is also being seriously affected by the drought. Prices are steadily rising in most districts, owing to the bad prospects of the rice harvest. The reports from the eastern districts and from Julpai-gorie and Cooch Behar are favourable. In these parts only the rice harvest is expected to turn out pretty fair. Fever is prevalent in some districts; elsewhere the general health is reported to be satisfactory."

THE following circular has been addressed by order of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal to the commissioners of divisions in that Presidency:—

"I am desired by the Lieutenant Governor to call your attention to the state of the crops in your division. The apparently early cessation of the autumnal rains seems to have generally had an injurious effect on the winter or khurreef crops, and there are some grounds for fearing that the dry weather may affect, also injuriously, the rubber sowing. It is possible that timely rain may still remove all cause for anxiety; but if such rain does not fall before you are satisfied that the north-east monsoon has become established, or, at any rate, before the end of the first week of November, you are requested to submit to Government, with as little delay as possible, a full account of the outturn of the last bhadoi and prospects of the coming khurreef and rubber crops in each district of your division. Your report should consider the amount of grain stocks in hand in each district, and the probable range of prices of food during the coming year. For those districts in which prospects may not be unfavourable, the information need not be detailed; for them a general statement is all that is needed. I am to add that your report should reach the Government before the end of November at the latest."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated Nov. 25:—

"The proposed modifications of the Ilbert Bill recently described by Lord Northbrook in his speech at Bristol have now been thoroughly discussed by the Anglo-Indian Press and public; and have met with all but universal disapproval. Among other objections it is felt that the compromise retains one of the worst features of the Bill, by giving jurisdiction over Europeans to statutory civilians—men who have been described by a high authority as 'a caste saturated with prejudice, and entirely ignorant of English habits and ways of thought.' The Times of India comments on the compromise thus:—

"Lord Ripon's Government have in effect resolved to recommend only for the sake of saving their own reputation a proposal which, in September, 1882, they declared would not justify special legislation. Writing to the Secretary of State more than a year ago, they stated, in most explicit terms, that if the amendment of the law were confined to conferring the proposed jurisdiction upon district magistrates and sessions judges, then special legislation would not be expedient. The conclusion is inevitable, that the compromise now proposed is only intended to save the amour propre of the authors of this deplorable blunder."

"The same newspaper points out that the safeguard suggested by Sir Charles Turner, and adopted by the Government—namely, that of allowing the High Courts to transfer a case from a native to a European magistrate is delusive, as the cost of its application will be prohibitive to the poorer classes."

"The Lahore Civil and Military Gazette asks what will be the effect of the modified Bill, and then answers the question in these words:—

"On paper it works well enough, in practice it will be impossible. Officials who have a practical knowledge of district work would not entertain it for an instant. No good purpose can be gained by disguising what to most Europeans in India is fast becoming, if it has not already become, a settled conviction. There is, in truth, but one solution of the difficulty, which no manipulation, no prevarication, can evade. At the close of every act of this solemn mockery, it becomes more certain that the only course open to the Viceroy, the only compromise possible, is his resignation, and we believe that nothing he has achieved during his Viceroyalty would become him better than quitting it."

"Every day now brings to Calcutta a number of people who left the capital during the earlier stages of the agitation, and have spent the summer in the hills or in England. It is remarkable that after a few days' residence here they all admit that during their absence they had not a conception of the intensity of bitterness which public feeling had reached upon the question. This ignorance well illustrates one of the strongest, if not the very strongest, of the arguments against the migration of the Government of Simla. Perched for eight months of the year on a remote hill top, and surrounded by secretaries, each of whom has spent his official life in the Secretariat, with little chance of acquiring district experience, the Government soon loses touch, not only of its own district officers, but also of the general public. It may be safely affirmed that if the Government were content to spend its whole time in the plains, we should never have heard of the Ilbert Bill, or of many other recent blunders. That the climate of Simla is more pleasant may be readily admitted; but the members of Council, secretaries, and heads of departments are not more delicately constituted than the High Court Judges, lawyers, and merchants of the Presidency towns, or the district officers of the Mofussil, who find it possible to carry on their work efficiently without seeing a hill from one year's end to another."

"Much surprise has been excited here by the news, telegraphed from home last week that Lord Kimberley had informed Mr. Atkins, delegate of the Anglo-Indian working men, that the responsibility for the initiation and modifications of the measure rested entirely with Lord Ripon's Government. During the last four months the Government of India has given several semi-official assurances that the decision of the matter had passed out of its hands, and that it could not even consent to a postponement of the discussion on the Bill without permission from the Cabinet."

"Crowded and enthusiastic meetings to protest against the Bill have been held at Purneah, Monghyr, and Silchar. A meeting is announced to be held at Allahabad this week, and preparations are being made for a great meeting at Calcutta during next month. The Eurasian Association of Calcutta has resolved to affiliate itself to the Anglo-Indian Defence Association to show that its members regard their interests as identical in general with those of the European community."

"The Duke of Connaught landed in Bombay on Wednesday last, and was received with great enthusiasm. In reply to an address presented by the Corporation, he stated that he looked forward to his sojourn in India with much satisfaction. It was, he said, most interesting to know that he had landed on the very spot where some 80 years ago his illustrious godfather, the Duke of Wellington, took his departure from this country. He was especially pleased to think that the Duchess was the first Princess of the Royal Family that had ever visited India. On the following day he laid the foundation stone of a hospital. Bombay has been en fete for three days, a fancy fair and the illuminations forming the chief features of the programme. The Royal party started for Meerut yesterday. They will probably visit Calcutta next week. A committee is now busily engaged in settling the details of their reception here, and a large sum has already been subscribed for the purpose."

"The Royal visit has not been the only source of excitement at Bombay. An unfortunate difference between the Government and the Judges of the High Court has also occupied public attention. The facts are these:—All previous Governors, at their annual Levees, have placed the High Court Judges on their right. The Judges attend in their robes, and so stand out distinct from all others. Opposite the Governor stands a crowd of those who have the privilege of the private entree. Last year an aide-de-camp placed the Judges, as usual, on the right, with the Commander in Chief, the Bishop, and the Members of Council. When the Governor entered, he sent an aide-de-camp to tell the Judges to move over to the crowd, which they did. The matter was much discussed, and the Governor was generally blamed. This year, before the Levee was held, the Chief Justice wrote to ask the Governor whether their right by usage would be restored to the Judges. The Governor replied that the Chief Justice would stand on his right hand but the Puisne Judges with the crowd. The Chief Justice refused to dissociate himself from his colleagues; and as the Governor persisted, the Judges in a body absented themselves from his Levee. Thereupon Sir James Fergusson informed them that he could not receive them at any Government House entertainment. It was, however, arranged that they should attend the State banquet in honour of the Duke of Connaught, the invitations to which had been accepted before the difference arose. It is stated that Sir James Fergusson means to refer the matter to the Secretary of State. The general feeling is that he showed a great want of tact, and a deplorable spirit of meddling."

"The preparations for the Calcutta Exhibition continue to make progress; but it is now quite certain that only a small proportion of the exhibits will be in their places by the opening day. There was some rumour of an intention to postpone the opening; but it was unfounded; and the ceremony will be gone through on December 4 as arranged. No programme has yet been issued. It seems clear that the number of visitors to Calcutta will be much smaller than had been anticipated, and the house proprietors and boarding-house keepers, who expected to reap a rich harvest, have already begun to abate the exorbitant terms which they announced some time ago."

"The last district reports for Bengal show no sign of improvement in harvest prospects. It is evident that in the greater part of the province the late rice crop will be almost a total failure; while, unless rain falls soon, the cold weather crops must also prove very deficient. The local Government has sanctioned an expenditure of Rs. 10,000 on relief works in some villages already suffering from scarcity, in North Tirhoot; and the Commissioner of Patna has gone to Tirhoot on a tour of inspection, and to organise the works. The Bengal census report, just published, shows that the population of the province on Feb. 17, 1881, was 69,536,851. Of these, 2,845,045 were residents in the feudatory States, the remainder being British subjects. The apparent increase in nine years was 10.89 per cent. Of the four main divisions of the province, Bengal proper comes first, with 35,607,682 souls; then Behar, with 23,127,104; next, Chota-Nagpore, with 4,225,989; and lastly, Orissa, with 3,730,735. The population of Calcutta, including its suburbs and Howrah, which really form part of the capital, was 790,293, and exceeds that of any other town in the British Empire, except London. Patna comes next, with 170,654; then, at a long distance, Dacca and Gya. The census officer remarks upon the paucity of towns and large villages in Bengal. The entire urban population, including in that term the inhabitants of all towns of 5,000 souls and upwards, was only 3,664,229, or 5·26 per cent. of the provincial population. He pronounces polygamy to be practically non-existent, the number of married females, even among the Mahomedans, being very slightly in excess of the number of married males. The Christians had increased from 91,000, in 1872, to over 128,000.

"The Akha raiders have not yet given up the two Native Forest officers whom they carried away. The Chief Commissioner of Assam has collected 200 frontier police, and sent a message demanding the return of the captives and the surrender of the ringleaders, with an apology. No reply has yet been received. The Akha country is unsurveyed, and little is known of the tribe which is armed only with knives and bows and arrows."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

SIR HENRY DURAND.*

A MAN, without high rank or much interest, who at the age of thirty or little more has had the opportunity of distinguishing himself in a famous campaign, has been private secretary to the Governor General of India, and finds himself Commissioner, or practically, constitutional monarch, of a province as large as all Scotland, may well be looked on as a fortunate man. If Sir Henry Durand's career had continued at the same rapid rate as it commenced, it is difficult to say what position would have been sufficiently exalted to be suitable for his acceptance at fifty. But the check in his career which occurred when Durand was Commissioner of Tenasserim, seems to have embittered his after life, and to have been acutely felt by a man who was in most things as philosophical as he was amiable.

In truth, it requires a vast amount of philosophy to recognise that, to most men, good fortune, or the opportunity of it, either comes early in life, at middle age, or at a late period of life; but that to very few men can it be continuous, just as to some peculiarly unlucky men it never comes at all. Perhaps the really fortunate men—si sua bona norint—are those to whom good fortune comes late, unless, as in the case of the late Lord Clyde, it comes so late that there are none living to share in it, and add to its appreciation.

The memoir of the life of Sir Henry Durand that lies before us has been written by his son, and appears to be fully as impartial as could be expected or be even possible under the circumstances. Whenever Mr. Durand gives a statement of his own on the events or occurrences of the time, he lays before us the facts on which such statement is based, and it is impossible to do more. With regard to Sir Henry's removal from the Commissionership of Tenasserim, considering that no man can occupy honestly the position of private secretary to a Governor General, and especially to such a man as Lord Ellenborough, without having to incur a certain amount of odium, and that, as a comparatively young man in a position which entailed high responsibilities, it would be quite conceivable that high-handed acts might be done in the interests of the public service which would require full explanation; it certainly appears that he received but scant justice and little if any, opportunity of disproving the case made out against him.

But the part in Sir Henry Durand's life that will be of greater interest to the public, is that he played in Central India during the Mutiny. In round terms the charges made against his action by Sir John Kaye were mainly two; that he leaped hastily to the conclusion that Holkar was disloyal, and secondly that he "fled without good cause from Indore." Mr. Durand gives in the body of the book, and, particularly in the appendix, a statement of facts and an argument that can be fairly based on them. A common sense view of the affair leads one to the conclusion that a man would be hardly fit to be a political officer who was so intensely innocent as to suppose a Mahratta chieftain of that time was, in such circumstances, doing anything but "trimming" to see which way affairs would turn best to his own advantage. As to the retreat from the Residency, it is a point the necessity of which could only be judged at the exact moment by a man who was accustomed to read the temper of excited men. The man who, but a few years before, had coolly waited to blow into a steady glow the port fire to the powder hose at Ghazni—an act which in these days would have insured him the V.C.—was not likely to have acted more precipitately than the occasion required, when danger was in the air. That he carried off his party successfully, and with small loss is to say that he did what was required of him at the time. It is now clearly shown that he would have had to wait for the battery of artillery from Mhow for hours, during which it is certain the Indore Residency would have been destroyed, and the refugees—women and children—murdered.

Moreover, a battery of artillery, though most formidable when supported, can of itself have little decisive effect, especially where infantry fire from under cover can be brought to bear upon the gunners and horses. Mr. Durand gives graceful and kindly testimony to the impartiality of Colonel Malleson in his "History of the Mutiny," and he adds fresh information on this debated point, which it is to be hoped may henceforth be considered settled.

That Sir Henry Durand should have made enemies during his career can scarcely be wondered at, for he was a man of great talent and a very wide range of knowledge; moreover, he knew this and cared little, so long as he went on the straight path of duty, whether he showed his superiority or not. But he eventually triumphed over the obstructions in his path, and as Foreign Secretary to Lord Canning, Lord Elgin, and Sir John Lawrence, and as Member of Council, he showed the same clear insight into affairs, and determined straightforwardness of speech and writing that had ever distinguished him. The honours that he had hoped for in early life came to him somewhat late, but he died in harness, as Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, in the execution of his duty. Of Sir Henry Durand's character his son, of course, says little, but part of Sir Auckland Colvin's opinion on this point appears to sum up the case so concisely as to be well worthy of quotation.

"Every one could see that he held strong opinions, and that, when he had made up his mind, he expressed his conclusions in language as strong as the views he professed. But I do not think those who knew him only as a man of decided convictions, were aware what patience, labour, study and, impartiality he had brought to the forming of his views. He seemed to me in discussion on public affairs eminently a man of sense, (a quality much rarer than is known); and next to sense, of probity, which is inseparable from sense. You could not talk to him five minutes on public affairs without feeling it was not a mere official, however able, but a statesman you were listening to. . . . He would talk to a shoeblack as he talked to His Excellency in Council; only, I think, he would have been most courteous to the shoeblack."

The second volume of the work contains essays and minutes written by Sir Henry Durand; and includes the celebrated article on the Second Sikh War, written for the Calcutta Review, which is to this day the best source of historical information regarding that famous campaign. There is also an article on the Burmese War of 1852, written during the period while that war was continuing, and one on "Central India under British Supremacy," a subject on which few men had Sir Henry Durand's special knowledge; besides several other subjects dealt with. Perhaps the most curious is an account of the life of Colonel Gardiner, one of Ranjit Singh's colonels and a wonderful specimen of the Dugald Dalgetty type of that period. The minutes of Sir Henry Durand are also on various subjects, but are always thoroughly well thought out and the views are clearly expressed.

One of these minutes, dated 1866, relates to the proposed establishment in India of a Government newspaper or a species of Moniteur. To this Sir H. Durand with characteristic sound sense was steadily opposed. He says:—"On some affairs a Government must be reserved, and it is on such questions that the Press is usually most solicitous of information and irritable at reticence. Silence now means nothing; but the case is different when a Moniteur is established with the avowed object of placing the right side of every question before the public. All must then be anticipated, or else explained and defended, otherwise reticence is construed into an admission that Government fears to face public opinion." He points out the difficulty of obtaining a competent editor, but also says: "The supplement of the Gazette appears to me a channel not half enough employed as a means of giving early and even anticipatory information; but the orders of the Secretary of State have to be borne in mind when it is a question of promulgating official papers or information. Still, I think that the utility of the supplement might be greatly developed without exciting the antagonism of the Press." Probably the best solution of this problem, acknowledged to be a difficult one, was that attained by Lord Lytton, himself a literary man, in selecting an officer of Government as a Press Commissioner to give out impartially such information as might and rightly should be made public. During the time that this system was employed, it was, of course, like any other arrangement to meet this point, fiercely assailed, chiefly by those who knew least about it; but it never had to encounter the storm of obloquy and reproach which Sir Henry Durand points out would be the fate of an established Government newspaper; and we believe that even now, though the name is discontinued, a very similar system is carried on in India for necessary reasons.

Mr. Durand apologises in the preface of the book for the fact that it has been hastily written. This may be so, owing no doubt to the pressure of his own duties; but the style is that kind of easy reading that generally implies careful writing, and if there is any slip in the book anywhere it has certainly escaped our notice. There are one or two clear simple plans or sketch maps to accompany the text referring to the campaigns in the Punjab and Central India. The whole book is exceedingly well got up, and will form a most valuable addition to the library.

MR HAKE ON THE ALPHABET. *

THIS is a remarkable effort to re-arrange the alphabet on a scientific basis, according to the varying lengths of the sounds of the letters, beginning at the mutes and ending with the most open and broad sounds. Mr. Hake arrives at the conclusion that the natural order of the alphabet is indicated by the series c, g, t, d, p, b, m, l, r, y, w; and he interweaves, with much ingenuity, into this main thread all the other components of the alphabet. It must be unknown to him that what he has diligently evolved from English phonology, had already been done 2,000 or more years ago by ancient Brahmans, who fixed the natural order of their alphabet in a similar manner, their series being, k, g, ch, j, t, d, p, b, m, y, l, r, v. Nor does this coincidence of conclusions between Mr. Hake and the Brahmans stop here; for the former, in explaining his views of diphthongism, in a rough sort of way hits upon some of the principles so clearly expounded by the latter under the names of Sandhi and Guna and Vridhhi changes of vocalisation. Mr. Hake cannot do better than study the scientific deductions of these early thinkers; for, by so doing, he may probably find that all he need do is to graft on to their perfect system the sounds which have been developed in more modern times.

It is, however scarcely correct to say, as Mr. Hake does, that the arrangement of the letters in the English alphabet is "arbitrary," for we find that, in three places, a guttural follows a labial, thus, b and c, f and g, p and q. We also find the softer tones take precedence (b, c, d, f, g); followed by the aspers (spiritus and flatus) h, k; then the nasals; then the sharper tones p, q, s, t; and finally the nondescripts, x, y, z. These facts betoken systematic classification of some kind; and we know that the letters were arranged in this order by the Phœnicians, from whom we, in common with Greeks, Romans, Arabs, Hebrews, and Syrians, derived our alphabetical system. The reasons for the present order of the letters must be sought in the ancient languages.

Mr. Hake truly says that "syllables, however they may be spelt, are concrete symbols;" but he trembles on the verge of a common error by adding, that they "convey to the mind the true sounds which they are intended to call up." It cannot be too often re-iterated that written language has to do with sound in only an indirect and subordinate way. The alphabet, which was originally purely hieroglyphic, came to be associated with sound at first from habit, and secondly from convenience. The object of writing, however, always was, and always ought to be, to present ideas to the eye, not sounds to the ear. The written words of a language are really pictures, which, by being looked at, suggest ideas to the beholder; hence the various ways of spelling words which are similar in sound but different in meaning are of the greatest possible advantage to the reader. At a glance, he sees the difference between mare and mayor, and between right, rite, write, and wright. Nothing can be more unscientific, confusing, and even absurd, than the phonetic spelling which some people have recently clamoured for.

We have said that Mr. Hake's paper is remarkable, and it is so from the circumstance that, by evidently independent processes, he arrives at conclusions in some respects identical with those of Indian grammarians. And this alone is sufficient to show that Mr. Hake has thought deeply on the subject.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

I.—OPINIONS OF THE COMMISSIONERS.—MR. MUNRO.

WE will consider the opinions of the Divisional Commissioners. They may be called Sub-Lieutenant Governors; they are the best repositories of local knowledge, and the chief revenue officers in the districts. Their opinions ought therefore to carry great weight. The report of the Presidency Commissioner naturally claims our attention first. Mr. Munro thus begins:—

"I have had many conversations on the subject with officials, zemindars, and others, and have omitted no opportunity of ascertaining the feeling of the people generally in connection with this important measure.

"As was to be expected, the landholding class is most strenuously opposed to the Bill, and there is no doubt that a most uncompromising resistance to its provisions will be manifested. There is a general feeling amongst members of the landholding class that zemindars will practically be effaced and reduced to the position of annuitants or partners with their ryots in the profits of land, and that the Bill, with its manifold provisions in favour of the ryots, constitutes a distinct infringement of the rights which they conceive were guaranteed under the terms of the permanent settlement, and which they have certainly exercised without dispute for nearly a century.

"It is rather curious to notice the different views of the effect of the Bill as taken by the planters of Lower Bengal and of Behar. The majority of indigo-planters in Lower Bengal, who are often landholders themselves, are opposed to the Bill, although some of them do not think that much harm will be done, especially with reference to the enhancement clauses. In Behar, again, I have noticed a decided feeling arising that the interests of the planters, hitherto identified with those of landlords in consequence of the tikadari system, will now be found to be on the side of the ryots.

"The ryots themselves are, as usual, ignorantly apathetic on the subject. They have heard some rumours of impending changes, and, in some instances, agitators have made them believe that the millennium of the ryots is at hand, when they will pay only nominal rents for and reap all profits from their land, but as a rule they have no intelligent idea on the subject, and it is difficult to define any feeling which they may have on the matter. Had the seasons of late years been unfavourable, no doubt we should have found them in a more complaining mood, but with good harvests they are not disposed to repine, and only wish for scarcity to show itself, in some district other than their own, that they may reap the benefit of increased prices of their crops. Under any circumstances it would be very difficult to convey to the mind of any ryot an accurate impression, or to create in it any definite idea of the meaning of the proposed alterations in the law, with reference to compensation for improvements, compensation for disturbance, or the doctrine of merger.

"It is not open to me now to discuss the principle of the Bill. Upon that question, as connected with the rights of the zemindars under the permanent settlement, I have already expressed an opinion, and, after the authoritative declaration of the Government of India of their views upon that point, it is not for me to re-open the discussion. There is, however, one point on which I venture to think I may still be permitted to make a remark. The Bill is framed for the purpose of carrying out a pledge given by the Government with regard to the rights of ryots, at the time of the permanent settlement. And in pursuance of the effort to fulfil this pledge it is now proposed to give the ryots fixity of tenure, fair rent, and freedom of sale of their holdings.

"How far these privileges or rights were guaranteed under the terms of the settlement has been disputed; how far the ryot requires fixity of tenure, which he has in Lower Bengal practically got, is also a question upon which there have been differences of opinion; whether freedom of sale will in reality confer on the ryots the boon which it is intended to give them, is also an open question; but there is and can be no difference of opinion as to the ryot being required to pay a fair rent for any holding which he possesses."

Mr. Munro then enters a strong protest against illegal cesses, in which we heartily join. We would only make a distinction between cesses which are really illegal, and those which are a moral adjustment of rent. With regard to khamar lands, Mr. Munro says:—

"I am bound to say that I have not seen in Lower Bengal any manifestation of any tendency on the part of zemindars to bring ryoti into the category of khamar lands. This tendency undoubtedly exists in Behar, and for Behar this chapter is chiefly framed. I have, however, seen indications of a tendency on the part of ryots to filch khamar land when they got a chance, and call it ryoti.

"It seems to me that, acting upon the presumption that all land is ryoti, until the contrary is shown, the zemindars will have, under the circumstances of Lower Bengal, great difficulty in establishing their rights to what really is khamar. When the time comes for a field survey of the province (and until this is done we shall never have any really satisfactory determination of the questions at issue between landlords and tenants), it would be fair to mark off as ryoti the amount of land held by each ryot as ryoti according to jumabundi, leaving the surplus to be adjudicated either as khamar or ryoti according to proof adduced. In many cases I have no doubt that such surplus would represent much khamar land that had originally been filched from the zemindar, owing, I admit, to his own laches, by the ryots."

Mr. Munro thus writes about the extension and transferability of the occupancy holding:—

"I have nothing new to add to the arguments of those who object to the extension of occupancy rights proposed by the Bill. It seems to me, as to them, unjust that the element of residence should not be an essential feature of the status of a settled ryot. I see no reason why a settled ryot having a right of occupancy in certain lands should, as a matter of right, have the same status in lands, which may be miles away from his village, although within the same estate; and the accrual of a right of occupancy to a settled ryot, in any lands subsequently acquired by virtue of his tenancy of lands at the time of his becoming a settled ryot, seems to me an unjust extension of occupancy right. I do not object to the tenures of occupancy ryots being made transferable subject to the consent of the landlord, or even without such consent, because as a matter of fact such transfers of tenures have become a matter of custom (although it may be remarked in passing that the customary exercise of rights by zemindars for a century is not admitted by the framers of the Bill, as a valid argument for arrogating such rights), but I question very much whether this power of transfer will be such a boon as is represented to the ryot. It will undoubtedly enable him to raise money for the purpose of spending it, but that it will, with his improvident habits, convert him into a thrifty peasant, I have very grave doubts.

"There is no doubt that this unfettered power of transfer will encourage the disputes and faction quarrels which have always been a prominent feature in native families, and if in addition to this power of transfer is given the privilege of sub-letting, without consent of the landlord, the latter will very soon find his estate full of occupancy ryots or their dependents in the shape of his bitterest enemies.

"The right of pre-emption on the part of the landlord is good so far as it goes, but the condition of being obliged to let the land as an occupancy holding does away with much of the protection which the right of presumption affords.

"If the tenure is allowed to be transferable, I would, on no account, permit sub-letting, which will simply encourage ryots to let out their tenures, and prey upon the sub-tenants. Such a system will, in the end, lead to sub-tenants or ordinary ryots under occupancy holders being much more rack-rented than they are now."

With regard to freedom of contract, Mr. Munro says:—

"As to the abolition of freedom of contract, I altogether fail to see the justice of the provision. I do not find anything of the kind in any of the settlement regulations, and I fail to see how the ryot is ever to learn how to stand alone, if he is to be rigidly protected against himself. The ryot is to be allowed freedom in every respect, except when he enters into an agreement with his landlord. If this is not setting class against class, and teaching the ryot to look upon the landlord as his natural enemy, words have no meaning. I would certainly leave the parties to contract as they please, and the courts should not, in my opinion, refuse to recognise such contracts. Denial of the right of contract has a distinct tendency to make the landlord resort to illegal cesses, and the ryot acquiesces in such improper exactions. For if the tenant is in need, or wishes in any way to propitiate his landlord, he will agree to pay a mangan without much hesitation, seeing that the right to make a legitimate agreement with his zemindar is denied to him. I must confess that, according to my experience, the ryot of Lower Bengal is not such a down-trodden or helpless creature, with reference to his own interests, as he is represented to be. I notice that the case of Backergunge is cited as an instance of exceptional prosperity amongst ryots, brought about apparently by the existence of a large number of peasant proprietors in that district. I am not prepared to attribute the prosperity of Backergunge to this cause, but if peasant-proprietorship in that district has caused prosperity, it is undeniable that such a system of land tenure has also brought with it a development of turbulence unknown in any other district. But leaving Backergunge out of the question, I can point to the majority of ryots having occupancy rights in Dacca, Tipperah, Chittagong, Jessore, Noakhally, and other districts, as being men who are eminently calculated to look after their own interests. It seems to me hardly consistent to inculcate upon the people by one enactment their fitness to govern themselves, and in another to provide them with a means of protection against their own acts; to give them power to note with reference to matters about which they express little concern, and to deny them a right to contract with regard to their rent, about which they are supremely interested."

Regarding enhancement of rent, Mr. Munro remarks:—

"With reference to the provisions for enhancement, it seems to me that, considering the difficulties of the subject, the proposals embodied in the Bill are on the whole fair. It might be simpler to eliminate the standard as regards rate of one-fifth of the average annual value of the gross produce of the land, and lay down the principle that the enhanced rent should not exceed so many annas in the rupee of rent, but I am not prepared to suggest any better provisions than those laid down. The general provisions as to the enhanced rent not being more than double the previous rent paid, that it may be ordered to take effect gradually, and that no re-enhancement shall take place for ten years, are, in my opinion, salutary. I do not see that zemindars have any reason to complain of these provisions, and I quite admit the necessity for giving the ryot protection against the ever-recurring threats of enhancement which have embittered the relations between landlords and tenants.

"I am not of opinion that it will be practicable to frame tables of rates such as are proposed, without an amount of harassment and expense to both landlords and tenants, which would be ruinous to them, and, even when prepared, I question very much whether it would be fair to either party to keep them in force for even ten years. Whether, when we have a field survey, it may be possible to frame such tables of rates with less expense is another question.

We transcribe below the remarks of Mr. Munro on other important provisions of the Bill:—

"ORDINARY RYOTS OR TENANTS-AT-WILL.

"With regard to ordinary ryots, the provisions of the Bill militate against all previous practice under which a tenant-at-will was allowed to hold land in accordance with agreement entered into between him and his landlord. I think it unwise that such a practice should be disturbed, and am not prepared to support those provisions which fix a maximum of rent to be demanded, and which introduce the entirely new system of compensation, for the disturbance of tenancy of a man who has no right to such tenancy except under agreement with his landlord. Throughout Lower Bengal there is no necessity for recognising any other principle than that of mutual interest between landlords and tenants in determining the relations which should exist on the part of landholders to tenants-at-will. No landholder in his senses will now aim at extravagant enhancements, for such a policy will very soon relieve him of his ryots. Most landlords are now anxious to get ryots to settle, and eviction, even of tenants-at-will, is a procedure which is, I imagine, more sparingly resorted to in Lower Bengal than in any country that I know of. The relations, therefore, between landlords and tenants-at-will may safely be left to determine themselves according to the economical laws of supply and demand.

"COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS.

"The chapter upon compensation for improvement seems to me to be based upon an entirely mistaken theory as to the wishes and acts of Bengal ryots with regard to improvements. It seems to be assumed that every ryot who has a holding is wishful to improve it, and that he only requires fixity of tenure to invest capital in developing the latent resources of his land. Hitherto he has been afraid to invest money, owing to the uncertainty of his tenure and the oppressions of his landlord. Once fix the former and restrain the latter, and it is assumed that the ryot will have courage to improve his land, which has hitherto remained less productive than it should have been.

"Now there have been for centuries, and are now, millions of ryots who have had fixity of tenure, and to whom the provisions of the Bill on the subject of the existence of tenant right are no novelty. Have these ryots shown any inclination to invest capital in improving their land; have they evinced any desire to increase the productive powers of the land? Even by the elementary process of manuring have they done anything under the influence of fixity of tenure in the way of constructing for the benefit of their lands any of the numerous works specified in section twenty-six as agricultural improvements.

"I do not know what may be the condition of affairs in this respect in other parts of the province, but in Lower Bengal the ryots with rights of occupancy or fixity of tenure have done nothing to improve their lands, and although, as is proposed, an opportunity of demanding compensation for improvements is given them, they will be only too ready to advance false claims for mythical expenditure in this respect. I say, without hesitation, that ryots with fixity of tenure have evinced no desire to benefit their land or expend any portion of their supposed savings in developing its resources. Any such improvements as have been made have, so far as my experience goes, been carried out by landlords, and not by ryots, and I see no reason to believe that the ryots, when they have more capital, will change their nature or their habits as regards expenditure, which they think ought to be incurred by their zemindar.

"If by fixity of tenure the ryot manages to save, he certainly does not spend his profits on his land. He adds to his house, which hardly can be called an agricultural improvement, buys cattle, increases his wife's stock of ornaments, spends somewhat more at marriages and village festivals; but it will not occur to him to improve the land, which, in his opinion, ought to improve itself, which has for ages yielded crops without expenditure on his part, on agricultural improvements, and which ought to continue so to do.

"The ryot, so far as my experience goes, does not want to improve his land or be improved himself, he wants to be let alone. And this chapter on agricultural improvements introduces a system which is perfectly new in the bucolic history of Bengal, which is certainly not needed with reference to the acts or wants of ryots at present, and which will infallibly lead to litigation and false claims of every description. Such a system will also most certainly lead to landlords declining to undertake to give any assistance to villagers in undertaking village improvements; and when villagers with, as is the case in most instances, opposing interests are left to themselves to carry out so-called improvements, the result may be easily imagined.

"I would not object to seeing the whole chapter excised from the Bill; but if it is to be retained, I am not in favour of giving even the occupancy ryot any right to make improvements for which at some time the landlord may be called upon to pay compensation, unless such improvements have been sanctioned by the landlord. It might be left open to the tenant to compel such consent, if, after application made the landlord refused to allow any reasonable improvement to be carried out.

"RECOVERY OF RENT.

"As to the provisions for recovery of rent, which was the beginning of the legislation which has found its outcome in the present Bill, I am afraid that landlords will hardly feel satisfied as to the relief which has been given them. Distraint has been practically abolished; for very few landlords will avail themselves of the provisions of the Bill, which enable them to apply to a court for permission to distraint, as laid down in the Bill. If a landlord has first to pay fees as for a suit, file an elaborate application duly verified and supported by documentary evidence, and then finds when he comes to execute this process, that, pending operations at court, the crop sought to be distrained has been removed, as it almost certainly will be, such landlord will not be much encouraged to repeat the experiment in many instances.

"So far as Lower Bengal is concerned, the existing provisions of the law as regards distraint may be safely maintained. I have no objections to illegal distraint being sternly put down, and I would visit abetment of such offences even with the punishment provided in section 186. Such a punishment, however, as I have already pointed out, is much more severe than that provided by the code for practical abetment or connivance at a ryot, involving perhaps loss of life on the part of a zemindar. If the lighter punishment for such abetment of a serious offence is to be maintained, it seems all are at one that connivance at an act of illegal distraint should be considered of so aggravated a nature as to demand such severe repression. The further provisions for the speedy realisation of rent go some way towards simplifying present procedure for recovery of rent, and, so far as they go, must be accepted by the zemindars as provisions in their favour. I am bound to say that on the principles on which the Bill is drawn, the zemindars could not expect further relief. I suspect, however, that they expected, and I am not prepared to say that they had not a good right to expect, very much more substantial relief as the outcome of their applications for a summary method of realising rents preferred during the last twelve years."

Mr. Monro thus concludes:—

"Generally, while I am prepared to accept the provisions of the Bill with reference to enhancement, as on the whole such as landlords under present circumstances cannot complain of, I am bound to say that I consider the provisions of the Bill in most respects unfair to zemindars, and one-sided in favour of ryots. This I hold to be the case with reference to (a) the immense extension of the rights of occupancy; (b) the bestowal of large rights on tenants-at-will; (c) the withdrawal of freedom of contract; (d) the provisions with reference to improvements; (e) the introduction of the system of compensation for disturbance; (f) the practical abolition of distraint, while insufficient relief is given in the way of a summary procedure for realisation of rents.

"Under such circumstances, I cannot convince myself that the Bill, if passed into law, will render practicable a satisfactory solution of the difficulties attending the disposal of the questions at issue. On the contrary, I feel constrained to believe that the application of the various provisions of the Bill must result in endless litigation, active hostility between landlords and tenants, and injury to the property of both."

Such is the opinion of one of the ablest and most experienced Revenue officers of Bengal. If anything, he has a bias more in favour of the ryot than of the zemindar, and yet he does not hesitate to say that the Bill, if passed into law, "must result in endless litigation, active hostility between landlords and tenants, and injury to the property of both."

THE ILBERT BILL.

THE following letter has been sent to the Earl of Kimberley, Secretary of State for India, by the Anglo-Indian Association (London Committee) formed to protest against the Ilbert Bill:—

"LONDON, Nov. 6.

"To the Right Hon. the Earl of Kimberley, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for India in Council.

"My lord,—On the 26th of July last we presented to your lordship, on behalf of a large body of Anglo-Indians residing in this country, a memorial, praying for reasons which were very fully stated, that Her Majesty's Government would be pleased to order the withdrawal of the Indian Criminal Procedure Act Amendment Bill, which for several months has been pending before the Council of the Governor General of India. In that memorial, and in the observations which were addressed to your lordship by the members of our deputation when presenting it, we were able to refer only in general terms to the very strong opposition with which the Bill has been received by a large majority of Englishmen in India, official as well as non-official. The official reports of public servants, both English and native, in every province in India, to whom, in conformity with the assurance given by the Governor General in the debate in the Council in March last, the Bill was referred, were published on the 8th of September last in a voluminous supplement of the Gazette of India, of which only a few copies have been received in this country, and we are informed that, owing to the non-receipt of the reports before the prorogation of Parliament, they cannot be made public here in a complete form until after Parliament reassembles.

"2. In these circumstances we desire to urge upon your lordship that the Government of India should be instructed to postpone further proceedings in this matter until the reports in question shall have been presented to Parliament, and until the members of both Houses of Parliament and the public generally shall have had a full opportunity of deliberately considering the opinions which have been submitted to the Government of India by the various administrative and judicial officers who have been consulted on the Bill. On perusal of the reports, as published in the Gazette of India, we find that, whether as regards numbers or as regards weight of experience and authority, there is a very great preponderance of official opinion which is earnest and emphatic in its condemnation of the Bill. We submit that in the face of this large body of adverse opinion emanating from servants of the Crown, most of whom possess long and varied experience of Indian administration, while among them are not a few who have rendered distinguished services to the State, and supporting, as it does, the almost unanimous opinion, not only of the unofficial English community in India, but of all classes of Anglo-Indians in this country, it would be in the last degree impolitic and unwise to press on legislation before the Parliament and the public in this country have had ample time to consider the question with the aid of the further information which has been collected.

"3. We will not occupy your lordship's time by dwelling upon the many remarkable facts and considerations which have been adduced against the Bill in the reports to which we refer, but we would earnestly invite your attention to a passage in the report of Colonel Bradford, Agent to the Governor-General in Rajputana, where reference is made to a resolution issued by the Government of Lord Lawrence, under date August 19, 1867, directing the local administrations to frame their proposals for opening up to natives of ability and character a more important, and dignified, and lucrative sphere of employment in the administration of British India, 'with due regard to the expediency of providing English officials for all districts in which European settlers or travellers abound,' on the ground that 'natives entrusted with administrative duties have a difficulty in dealing with independent Europeans.' We submit that this injunction, issued by one of the most eminent Indian statesmen of modern times, who was a staunch advocate of a Liberal policy in the matter of advancing natives of India in the public service, at a time when that policy was engaging the serious consideration both of the Home Government and of the Government of India, affords in itself a strong condemnation of Lord Ripon's measure.—We have the honour to be, your lordship's most humble servants, A. J. ARBUTHNOT, J. R. BULLEN-SMITH, J. DACOSTA, ROYER LETHBRIDGE, J. M. MACLEAN, S. B. PARTIDGE, W. S. SETON-KARR."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—In a paragraph which appears in the Times of to-day, giving a short account of an interview between Lord Kimberley and Mr. Atkins on the subject of the Ilbert Bill, it is stated that "his lordship said that he wished it to be particularly understood that the English Government had nothing whatever to do with the Bill, which was initiated by Lord Ripon." In order to prevent any possible misapprehension, Lord Kimberley desires me to say that in mentioning to Mr. Atkins that the Bill originated with the Government of India he had no intention of laying any particular stress on that fact, still less to imply, as might perhaps be inferred from the statement in the paragraph, that Her Majesty's Government did not approve the Bill. His lordship will be much obliged if you will have the goodness to insert this in your next impression.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully, W. J. MAITLAND.
India Office, Nov. 23.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE TIMES."

SIR,—The Times of to-day contains a letter from Lord Kimberley's private secretary about his lordship's intentions in what he said to me about the Ilbert Bill last Wednesday at the India Office. Mr. Maitland does not deny that "his lordship said that he wished it to be particularly understood that the English Government had nothing whatever to do with the Bill which was initiated by Lord Ripon." But Mr. Maitland says his lordship had no intention of laying any particular stress on the "fact" to which it refers. I will not venture to express any opinion as to what Lord Kimberley's intentions may have been, but as I have committed to paper the entire conversation immediately after leaving his lordship's presence, and while it was quite fresh in my memory, I am fortunately in a position to quote the exact words made use of, and I hope, in fairness to me, you will be so good as to allow me to state them.

Lord Kimberley replied to a certain question I took the liberty of asking, and I requested his permission to make known that reply to the working men I represent. This his lordship would not grant, but he said, "You may tell the people in India that the matter now rests with the Council in India, and I wish particularly that it should be clearly understood the English Government had nothing whatever to do with the Bill which had been initiated by Lord Ripon, and I hope efforts will now be made to soothe the minds of the people and stop the agitation." Lord Kimberley emphasised the words in italics.

I have respected his lordship's wishes, and have not informed the working men in India of the reply which he desired should not be published, nor have I made known the remark that accompanied that desire; but I have communicated to my constituents as nearly as possible the intimations which Lord Kimberley gave me of the general policy of the Government toward them.—Yours obediently,

F. T. ATKINS, Delegate from the Working Men in India.

142, Buckingham Palace-road, S.W., Nov. 24.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—Lord Kimberley observes that Mr. Atkins, in his letter to you on the 24th inst., on the "Ilbert" Bill, reiterates the statement that his lordship told him he "wished particularly that it should be clearly understood that the English Government had nothing whatever to do with the Bill, which had been initiated by Lord Ripon."

I am desired to say that Lord Kimberley regrets to be obliged to contradict Mr. Atkins, who, he is sure, has not intentionally misrepresented him, but that he must emphatically deny that he used any such expressions.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BICKERSTETH.

THE ILBERT BILL: SOME FACTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH."

SIR,—In preceding letters I have shown that the Bill, besides being introduced on false pretences, and supported by other statements equally unfounded, can be of no possible advantage to the people of India, even admitting the full extent to which its promoters pretend that it will ever operate. It can be of no benefit whatever to the people of India, taking that term in a wide sense, while it is a distinct degradation of Englishmen, and deprives them of a right which they have possessed for centuries. There are few men—I doubt whether there is one—better able to form a judgment on the merits of the Bill or its policy than Sir Fitzjames Stephen, and his letters on the subject utterly "smash and pulverise" the miserable pleas which have been used as arguments for the Bill. It was he who revised the codes of India, and there could be no one better able to do it than he, with his experience of England and India. The policy of the measure may be safely left in his hands. But there are some considerations which have not been touched by me, and upon which I would not lay much stress, except as they serve to illustrate the hollowness of the pretensions as to the necessity of the Bill, and the falsehood by which this pretended necessity has been supported. We are told that the measure is one of a very far-sighted policy, and is merely carrying out that of Lord Mayo, who saw the necessity of admitting natives to office when they were qualified for it. That was no doubt a part of Lord Mayo's policy, only it is carrying it out in a different way from that which he adopted. The friends of the "teeming millions" always say that we have educated the natives to a level with ourselves, and it is only right and proper that they should be admitted to share the Administration. No one that I know of denies this. But some people do deny that, having educated a number of the natives to a considerable extent, the Government of India is bound to provide the men thus educated with lucrative posts in the Administration, any more than the Government here would be bound to provide posts for the graduates of Oxford and Cambridge. But that is what seems to be expected. This was not the idea of Lord Mayo. He often complained that the educational policy of the Indian Administration was wrong. The whole country was taxed to provide a collegiate education for a comparatively few people, often the sons of men who could well afford to pay for their education, while the mass of the poor, the real "teeming millions," had their share of the educational advantage by being compelled to pay for it, as they have to pay for their ecclesiastical establishment. His idea was that the people should be educated at least in the three R's, in order that they might be able to keep their own accounts against the usurer, to read their agreements and contracts, so that they should not be cheated by false ones, that they should be able to read and understand the laws and their rights under them. Lord Mayo's was a levelling policy, but it was a policy of levelling up, not like Mr. Ilbert of levelling down. I have said again and again, and I challenge disproof, that the Ilbert Bill does nothing whatever to raise the people of India. It would not probably in a century level up a hundred natives. It would at once level down many thousands of Europeans, without the least necessity existing for the process. One of the chief arguments in favour of the Bill is that, as native magistrates are empowered to exercise criminal jurisdiction in the presidency towns, they are equally competent to do so in the country. This is a very plausible argument. But there is something stronger than plausible arguments, and that is stern facts. Some of the supporters say that the arguments against the Bill are only noisy declamation; let us have facts. Well, we try to meet them in this particular. There is a homely proverb which says that the proof of the pudding is in the eating thereof. It is not an unreasonable assumption that in trying the experiment of giving this jurisdiction in the presidency towns, the very best men in the native service would be selected, and they would certainly be selected to work in the capital. Well, what is the result? At a meeting in London, a few weeks ago, this demand for facts was made by Mr. Martin Wood, and seeing a number of Hindoo gentlemen present, including Rajah Ram Pal Sing, I asked if any of them would tell me how many Hindoo magistrates had exercised jurisdiction in Calcutta during the last, say, quarter of a century. They could not tell me. This did not say much for the enlightenment of the "masses of intelligent natives who take an interest in these things," according to Major Baring. I told them that there had been three, and I asked if any of the native gentlemen present could tell me what became of them. They were silent, whether from ignorance or policy it is not for me say. But I answered the question. One still sat on the Bench (Behary Lal Gupta) who had raised the question which gave rise to the Ilbert Bill; the other two had, I believe, been dismissed the service for falsifying their judicial records! I have before me a letter from an ex-Judge of the High Court of Calcutta, giving the facts as to one case, and, indeed, it is within my own experience; the other I have upon authority equally trustworthy. Here, then, are the facts. Three have been tried in the position, and two of them have had to be dismissed for the same offence—falsifying their records. It is to subject Englishmen to such jurisdiction, even out of reach of the Press and of legal assistance, that the Ilbert Bill has been introduced. I also gave the meeting another instance of the fitness of natives for high administrative office, which I cannot refer to without extreme regret. A highly-educated native gentleman was a candidate for a very important and responsible office. He sought it—not, he said, for the sake of the salary, which reached over four figures sterling, for he was a rich man already—but to prove the capacity of his countrymen for administration. Recognising this as a legitimate ambition, and knowing that other native gentlemen looked forward to the experiment with great hopes, I did what lay in my power to obtain the situation for him, and gave him considerable assistance in the way of advice based on English experience. He "did run well for a season," but the old Adam was too strong for him, and notwithstanding that the post was a highly-paid one, and that the pay was no temptation, he had after a time to "send in his resignation," under circumstances which caused his friends much pain, none more than myself. But it was felt as a great blow to his fellow-countrymen who had looked forward to his administration as an argument in favour of a more general employment of natives in administrative work. I believe he deeply regretted his lapse, and I hope yet to see him show his capacity and worth. Of course, it may be replied that there are Englishmen who fail, and that there are natives who pass safely through certain trials. This is doubtless correct; but the doctrine of percentages, as shown by these facts, is not in favour of the Ilbert Bill.

There is another branch of this argument that may be met. There is an "anomaly" still left in the case should the Bill pass into an Act. No native judge has power to try a European British subject for a capital offence, even in the Mofussil, where the "administrative inconvenience" argument is adduced. But this argument may be fairly met by another. The highest moral standard that we raise, the characteristic of our heroes, our noblest men, is, that they hold their honour dearer than life. How often is George Washington held up to the rising generations as a youth who was too honourable to tell a lie? And let us hope that there are thousands of such men. But if so, it may be argued that if a native magistrate is not allowed to have jurisdiction over a man's life, he ought not to have power over his honour, or his liberty. His property may be subject to such jurisdiction, as there is a possibility of that being restored should it be wrongfully taken from him. But his liberty or honour once taken cannot be restored, though his innocence may be proved.

Though it is like slaying the slain, I turn for a moment to the argument that not to give this jurisdiction is a "slur" upon the native magistrates and judges. This discovery comes rather late. There have been several natives appointed as Judges of the High Court, which is composed of civilians of long experience in the country, and of barrister judges. There have been several native judges appointed to this Court; but they have never felt the grievance of not having to preside at criminal sessions. On this point, however, I will give the words of a correspondent intimately familiar with the subject. He says:—"It is a fact that though we all had legally the same powers, no judge except a barrister judge, ever for years, presided at a sessions or criminal trial of the High Court on its original side. I believe that since my departure, civilian judges have presided at these criminal trials, as indeed, from their knowledge of law, procedure, and languages they are quite capable of doing. But owing to the old and established custom that only English lawyers tried Englishmen, no civilian, except in one instance, did ever hold an original sessions tried in Calcutta from 1862 to 1870, and that civilian, it so happened, was a barrister. Nor do I remember any of my civilian colleagues ever making any complaint or disturbance, or being hurt, because we discharged appellate jurisdiction only, both in civil and criminal cases. I can affirm as a fact within my own knowledge that none of the first three native judges ever presided at a sessions trial that was to try an Englishman for the smallest offence known to the law, or ever felt hurt or slighted any more than his civilian colleagues in the High Court at this 'anomaly' or 'exclusiveness.'"

No, it required the super-refinement of the native magistrate of Calcutta and the large experience of Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert to discover what had escaped the penetration of the civilian and native judges of the High Court from its formation. My correspondent thinks that if the advocates of the Bill are not convinced by the letters of Sir Fitzjames Stephen, neither would they be convinced by anything that he could say; and probably, I would add, where party interests are concerned and they are resolved not to be convinced, they would not be so though one rose from the dead.

THE ILBERT BILL: SOME OPINIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH."

SIR,—Having dealt, I hope fairly, with some of the facts of the Ilbert Bill, I begin to think that I have trespassed sufficiently long upon your courtesy, and hope to conclude in the present letter. Not that the subject is by any means exhausted. Before giving other opinions there is another fact which will serve to illustrate some of the misrepresentations that have been made by the advocates of the Bill. In almost any other case, I should scorn to use such an argument lest it should be misrepresented, as was Mr. Roebuck when someone taunted him with not giving as much money away as his wealthy colleague, Mr. George Haddfield. He said, though it was not a fact, it was not a fault, but an imputation upon his poverty. I do not wish to impute to the poor people of India their poverty as a fault. The whole tenor of my writings is a proof to the contrary. I sympathise with them in their poverty, and deplore that when they need bread they should have offered to them this wretched stone of an Ilbert Bill. "The mass of the natives who take an intelligent interest in politics, and whose number is increasing daily, would regard the withdrawal of the Bill as an outward and visible sign that the moderate views of the best Anglo-Indian statesmen (our noble selves), past and present, were for the future to be subordinated to those of the extreme section of the European community." Such are the words of Major Baring in the Nineteenth Century for Oct., 1883. If such are the feelings of the mass of the natives, surely, poor as they are, they would make some little sacrifice for what is represented as of such vast importance to them. What are the facts? On the introduction of the Bill the European community met and proposed a Defence Fund. In a few days this reached £10,000, or a lakh of rupees. The agitators in favour of the Bill said that they would be like Shylock, follow the example of the Europeans, and would "better their instructions." They talked very large as to their numbers and their power, even in a military sense. Some of the more rabid of the native papers showed how easily the English could be driven out of the country, or their bones only be left in it. But without coming to blows, they would show the Europeans how insignificant the sahibs were. The latter were a mere handful, and they were the millions of India. They would beat the sahibs at their own game, and if the gentlemen could raise a lakh of rupees, they would raise six lakhs. There was a good deal of gasconading of this kind, and, after considerable agitation, much speech-making, and sending round of subscription lists, there was raised the magnificent sum of under £400! Again, I say, this is not an imputation upon the poverty of the people, for a subscription of a hundredth part of a farthing from each of the teeming millions would almost have produced this sum. Where then were "the mass of the natives who take an intelligent interest in politics?" They were nowhere, for no such mass exists. Where were the educated, intelligent, and wealthy natives who might, if they had thought proper, have easily found the six lakhs? They knew perfectly well that the agitation was a false one, that it was got up and stimulated by men who would not object to be the Parnells, the Healsys, and the Biggars of the East; and they held and still hold aloof. They know that what they most prize and what they would still hold has been won for them by the non-official English community, and they cannot afford to be alienated from the non-officials, and to furnish the sinews of war to the agitators, in whom they have no confidence. Neither they nor the mass of natives can possibly derive any advantage from the Bill, and hence the magnificent subscription, which was to be six times the sum raised to oppose the Bill, has barely reached one-twentieth part. This is not a bad indication of the estimation in which the Bill is held by the masses of India, and its more wealthy men.

Let us see what is said by some other classes. Here is the opinion of a native soldier:—"When I read in the English and vernacular papers of so many Englishmen of note moving in favour of the Ilbert Bill (this was on the misrepresentation that the opinions of the officials were in favour of it), I cannot avoid entertaining feelings of extreme regret. . . . When I reflect on the manner in which justice was administered in this country by its former rulers, I cannot avoid feeling a sensation of dread as to the consequences which would result to this unhappy land were native agitators to exercise the same powers as their European brethren. . . . It grieves me further to think that Englishmen themselves should be striving to lower the dignity and destroy the prestige of their countrymen in India. They are perhaps misled by the thought that this country has made as great advancement in civilisation and education as their own, and is therefore in a state to receive the same political institutions as those prevailing in European countries. . . . Were this measure passed, the blessing of British rule in India would become a thing of the past. Government will then understand the object of my writing and my loyal intentions when, after self-government has been established all over the country, nothing but complaints are (will be) heard from every direction. If our rulers are desirous of maintaining the people of this country in happiness, peace, and comfort, they will abstain from taking a step so fatal to the interests of the country."

"MAHOMED NOOR KHAN,

Late Ressaidar, 7th Bengal Cavalry."

This sensible and honest old soldier says he knows that he will be disliked for expressing this opinion; and it cannot be to his advantage to oppose the Government. But he writes like one who knows his subject, and says what he thinks. Another native writes:—"The natives have suddenly been roused from a deep sleep—a sleep in which they were dreaming of nothing more than being traitors! Had it not been for the noble-hearted Europeans, India would never have flourished and attained so good a name as being the brightest jewel in the British crown. The natives of this country, instead of being thankful for all the good and freedom enjoyed by them to the Europeans, are just the reverse. If they wish to see the sketch of a veritable Englishman in strong relief, let them refresh their recollections with Walter Scott's "Two Drovers." The Englishman is indeed rough, surly, and a bigot; these are his weak points, but if ever there was a generous, good, and tender heart, it beats within his breast; most placable, he forgets and forgives—forgets not only the wrongs he has received, but the insults he has inflicted; and notwithstanding these excellent qualities of forgiveness and forgetfulness, the mistaken ideas of the natives are clouded, which do not make them understand that good fellowship is not only commendable, but expedient too."

I have shown that the teeming millions of India take no interest in the Bill, that the wealthy natives distrust the agitators; and I will now adduce the opinion of a sensible native of the middle class. Writing about the Bill, he says:—"The question requires delicate handling. Demagogues, stump-orators, and pseudo-patriots, for motives best known to themselves, have mixed up so many cross-purposes and conflicting interests in the matter, and have so muddled them, that it is difficult to make a fair and satisfactory solution of the problem. The Bill itself can be made harmless by adding another paragraph, which will make it optional with the British-born (would-be) offenders to be tried by their own countrymen, or by the native of this country. . . . The natives are to (should) bear in mind the amount of good done to this country by Englishmen, official and unofficial. They have taught us how to fight constitutionally for our social privileges with the constituted authorities. They have fitted us for the battle of life by liberal education and by the transplantation of Western civilisation into this country. What an amount of gratitude we owe to our benefactors. The flow of their capital has wrought wonders in this country. We ought not to forget so many benefits conferred on us, and take stock in their stead in our minds certain hasty and unparliamentary phrases hurled against us in an angry moment. It behoves all parties to make up all past differences and glide on as we did, peaceably, since the advent of the English merchant princes in this land of fruitfulness."

The above suggestion of optional jurisdiction is one of the most sensible that has been made, and I cannot understand why it has not been adopted, except that, as Mr. Gladstone says, the spirit of European aggression must be checked, which simply means that opposition must be voted down, irrespective of the merits of or the necessity for the Bill. I could multiply these extracts of native opinion, but it is perhaps as useless as it is needless to do so. The passing of the Bill is probably a foregone conclusion in party interests, irrespective of its effects. But there are parties interested whom I have not yet named. The churches and missionary societies in England are concerned about the propagation of the Gospel in India. If they will inquire of their missionaries they will find that the alienation of feeling produced by this wretched Bill will exclude the missionaries from native society and their wives from the zenanas, and that promising field will be closed to their operations. Already the native Press tell their countrymen to keep the missionaries at arm's length, and not admit them to their families. I have seen letters from missionaries and clergymen of the Establishment who have denounced the Bill in far stronger terms than I have thought proper to use, and it is high time that the religious communities understood the bearing of the question. For missions it is almost a vital question. But as to its general bearing it has been shown that it was introduced on grounds that have been proved to be false. It has been supported on various grounds that have been proved to be untenable. Advantages have been claimed for it which it cannot possibly confer on the people of India, while it has been distinctly shown that it inflicts a wrong and an indignity on Englishmen in India; and it is equally clearly demonstrated that should its provisions be carried out to the fullest extent its advocates claim, it could not possibly protect against "European aggressiveness" one-twelfth of the people of India. The whole matter lies in a nutshell so far as argument is concerned. Either the Bill is necessary in the interests of the people of India, or it is not. If it be not necessary, it is a most unstatesmanlike measure to have created needlessly the irritation and race antagonism that have attended its introduction, while it has distinctly thrown India back at least a generation, without doing a fraction's good to anyone. If it be necessary, it is a weak, miserable, contemptible instalment of justice, and an insult to and a cruel mockery of the people of India.

MEETING AT RANICHERRA.

At a meeting of Doonars Planters held at Ranicherra, the following resolution was unanimously passed:—

That this meeting opposes by every possible means the passing of the so-called Ilbert Bill, in its present or in a modified form, by which it is proposed to check the ascendancy of Englishmen in India, according to Mr. Gladstone; by which we shall be deprived of our rights as European British subjects, and by which our lives and liberty, as well as those of our wives and female relatives, will be at the mercy of native magistrates and judges. This meeting desires to express its entire concurrence with the resolutions passed at the last meeting of the Indigo Planters of Behar, under Mr. Hudson's presidency. It also views with the deepest regret the reckless manner in which Government is acting in not at once withdrawing this most obnoxious Bill after having heard the opinions of those most qualified to give authoritative and unbiased criticisms on that Bill, and who are, with but very few exceptions, entirely against the measure.

The project of removing the Madras Army head quarters permanently to Ootacamund has been submitted to the Secretary of State for sanction by the Government of India, with the following suggestions; that, instead of 40 per cent. allowances, as proposed by Sir Frederick Roberts, the clerks be granted one-third of their salary as batta, and Rs. 15 instead of Rs. 20 for warm clothing for the clerks, annually. It is expected, a local paper says, that the move to Ootacamund will be made during the Christmas holidays.

THE ILBERT BILL.

THE controversy about the Ilbert Bill has been turned aside greatly from the main and only really important issue.

In all criminal cases the Government is prosecutor. There is a presumption of law also that the accused is innocent until convicted. The parties in a criminal case are therefore the State on the one hand, and its innocent subject on the other. The court is to hold the balance between the parties, and must therefore have the confidence not only of the one party, the State, but of the other, the innocent subject.

The present law in India as regards criminal jurisdiction over European British subjects is the result of the application of this principle, the courts which now have jurisdiction having held the joint confidence of the Government and the European British community. The Ilbert Bill is a proposal to change the nature of these courts, and the important part of this change is that certain persons who have not hitherto possessed the confidence of the European community are to be given criminal jurisdiction over its members.

Now the controversy has raged very much around the issue as to whether these persons are likely to be fit to exercise this jurisdiction, and it may be taken generally that those who are likely to be under that jurisdiction, and those who are likely to be responsible for the management of such persons under it do not believe in the likelihood of fitness, while many who are not at all likely to test that fitness in their own persons have a strong faith in it. We do not find many Europeans betting their own safety on the correctness of their judgment. The question of individual fitness, however, is not the real or only issue.

The Bill was introduced without consulting the European British community, and Government has behaved all through as if the latter had no right to be consulted in the matter at all, beyond a mere power of petitioning in common say with the natives who are not affected either for good or bad by the Bill.

The Bill is a proposal on the part of one party to appoint tribunals for the decision of issues between it and the other party without the consent of the other party. The tribunals are therefore to be servants of the State, and not umpires between the State and the subject.

The passing of the Bill will be a signal for the breaking away of Government from the public opinion of the European British community.

Now, who are the European British community? The distinction between them and native society in India has been represented as a purely race distinction. That is not so, for the distinction is dropped after the third generation. Compare the distinction of the Brahmin with this. The distinction occurs only in the Criminal Procedure Code of all the laws of India, in the form—not of a special right to any office, or a special exemption from any punishment, but as a special safeguard against miscarriage of justice in any criminal case; and the principle of the distinction is this, that the European British subject is a member of European British society, not yet naturalised in India. He is presumed to be naturalised after three generations, and not before. Whether the definition is the best imaginable is another question; but at all events, it includes all those persons, raw from England and the colonies, whom it is most necessary to protect and watch.

Now, the very dearest right of the Briton is his right to an impartial and intelligent tribunal in all criminal cases between himself and the State. His affection for this right dates back to a time when the State was not friendly and benevolent, and is fostered to the present day by that profound distrust of officials, which is the most marked characteristic of the Englishman.

This tribunal he conceives to be secured first by the principle of trial by peers which, without doubt, means not by persons who are not inferior, but by persons who are not materially different in manners and customs. This is effected in his own country by the jury system, where a high and learned official lays down the law, and a jury of ordinary men finds a verdict on the facts.

The second safeguard is the right of challenge, by which an accused person may set aside a certain number of the jurymen who are proposed to try him, without reason given. This ensures that the jury shall not be packed with partisans of the opposite side, that is the Crown.

Now, the European British community in India is mainly composed of persons to whom these safeguards are so familiar that they cannot conceive a state of things where such safeguards do not exist, and place an almost superstitiously extravagant value upon them.

In the interior of India, juries could not generally be got, and challenges at the time of trial were not possible. There, therefore, both safeguards are swept away by force of circumstances. The necessity for courts on the one hand, and for safeguards on the other, led to a compromise between the Government and the European British community, by which the former obtained a sufficient number of courts, and the latter what it considered to be a good practical safeguard. The courts were to be such of the European British servants of Government, and such other members of European British society in India as had the confidence of Government, and the safeguard was a formal admission by the European British community of such persons as their peers, and an admission on the part of Government of their right of challenge which they formally waived.

Now Europeans, plunged as they have been suddenly into what is to them a strange atmosphere of despotism, have, thanks to this arrangement, been neither law-breakers nor suspicious of the law, but have lived free, happy, and orderly, just as they would at home.

The principle of the Ilbert Bill is that their right to trial by peers and their right of challenge are to be abolished for good and all. That principle is so, not merely because the Bill will give jurisdiction to natives, but because it will take away the power of challenge hitherto allowed to the European British community. That community look with alarm on this principle. It is one thing to waive voluntarily the right of challenge to a limited number of persons for well-understood reasons, and another to be forcibly deprived of this right of challenge to an unlimited number of persons of whom nothing is known that inspires confidence. Perhaps the original intention of the promoters of the Ilbert Bill was merely to obtain such a waiver of the right of challenge as was before obtained in 1872, when the European community consented to waive its challenge to many courts not originally confided in. If so, it was introduced in a most injudicious way, and should have been withdrawn as soon as the Government saw, as they must plainly see now, that the European British community was not prepared to meet their views.

The Bill was not withdrawn, but persisted in; threats were made forcibly to pass it in utter disregard of the right of challenge. The right of challenge was to be entirely ignored, and the confidence of the Government, which is prosecutor in every case, was to be the only condition of obtaining the powers of a tribunal to decide between itself and the other side.

As might be expected, the threat of force has decided the matter in the eyes of the European. The knot was loose, and might have been untied; but the hard tugging of the Government has so tightened it that it is hardly possible for mortal man to untie it.

Would it not be wise in the Government to follow the advice of the Chief Commissioner of Assam, who advises the Government, though he thinks the measure a just one, to withdraw the Bill on account of the determined opposition it has encountered? Considering the principle on which that opposition is based—the Englishman's right of challenge—would it be anything more than right that the Government should hark back, and seek to gain touch again with its law-abiding and loyal European subjects? Would it not be much more likely to carry them with it by the power of sympathy and reason (for it claims to have reason on its side) than by the much less efficient and more dangerous use of force which at present seems to find favour? Is it not worth a little patience, a little forbearance, a little deference to feeling, whether mistaken or otherwise, to win the confidence and soothe away the opposition of a great and strong community—loyal to the Crown, to the Law, sympathising with the efforts of the Government towards bettering the condition of the Natives, active beyond the Natives themselves in encouraging and doing useful work in the country?

Should they not be bound to the State, as Englishmen, by affection, and not fear?
